Pickets Quit At U.C. Gate

BERKELEY (AP) — Unexpected peace has come to the University of California Berkeley campus with the end of a teaching assistants' strike and suspension of activities by striking minority students.

Chancellor Roger Heyns expressed optimism at the sudden turn of events and said, "We have a climate in which we can make more progress on the issues."

However, he stressed that the state of emergency declared by the governor will not be lifted immediately and that police will remain on campus until he is assured "the techniques of violence and vandalism" will not return.

Pickets have blocked campus entrances and demonstrators have smashed windows, damaged equipment and furniture and bombarded police with bottles and rocks.

The Third World Liberation Front, spearhead of th minority students' strike which began Jan. 22, launched the approach to campus peace yesterday. It said that strike activity would be suspended to "reaffirm our commitment to negotiate an orderly settlement to our strike and implement our demands."

Chief among these demands has been creation of an autonomous Third World College.

The American Federation of Teachers Local 1570, then announced it had ended the teaching assistants' strike which began Feb. 18. The AFT local had supported the students' demands, calling for removal of police from the campus and for amnesty for thse strikers arrested or disciplined.

Both groups indicated they felt the stage has been set for eventually reaching their goal of an ethnic studies college.

Chancellor Heyns said his administration would continue working on the issue involving Third World studies. He added he had no conflict with Third World students, that the issues they had raised were important to school officials before the strike began and would continue to be. But he added there would be no accelerated procedures to satisfy their demands.

On March 4 the Academic Senate recommended to Heyns that he appoint a chairman for an interim Ethnic Studies department and suggested this could pave the way for a College of Ethnic Studies."

Conn Hallinan, president of the AFT local, said the union's action had resulted in "substantial gains" but Heyns said the strike "was a complete failure" and any gains were not the result of it.

NEVADA EXECUTION PROTEST

San Francisco Theological Seminary students erect cross at the San Anselmo campus to protest the execution of Lester Morford III, 24, formerly of Santa Rosa, on April 1 in Nevada. The cross was erected Thursday, and the seminarians promised to drag it from Sacramento to Carson City next week on a "pilgrimage of mercy" to seek a stay of the execution for murder. 'Revolution' Stirs College Of Marin

The chaotic student government situation at the College of Marin was even more confused today following a "revolution" yesterday which one side claims swept the current government out of office and the other insisting that nothing of the sort happened.

The apparent upshot of a stormy meeting in the student center was that both the college's student Executive Council and a self-appointed "interim" committee both will meet Monday to consider setting up new elections.

An attempt to get a Superior Court injunction to close down the entire school Monday apparently has been dropped.

"The "revolution" — which one student described as "more of a coup d'etat — occurred during a noisy two-hour meeting in and around the union building called by the militant Third World Liberation Front (TWLF).

The TWLF and other factions on the campus claim the current student government was illegally elected.

The resignation of the student officers was demanded at yesterday's meeting and some officers did quit their posts. Others refused, although the revolting students claimed afterwards that the whole government had been booted out.

Secret Sessions Hint Progress On State College Peace Efforts

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—A secret meeting between San Francisco State Acting President S. I. Hayakawa and student strike leaders today gave hope that some kind of settlement to the bitter dispute might be near.

None of the parties who attended yesterday's 75-minute closed-door meeting would discuss what happened, but one observer not representing either side commented that the talks "seemed promising to me."

And yesterday afternoon, a faculty spokesman heading a committee also negotiating with the dissident students indicated the committee will meet most of the weekend with them.

The Students for a Democratic Society also called off a rally when the striking Third World Liberation Front declined to participate.

And a final note of optimism came as the Black Students Union decided to postpone a "Black Awareness" mass mobilization scheduled for the weekend. The BSU made it clear, however, that if talks break down, the mobilization is on for next weekend.

San Rafael Schools To Repeat Bond Try

$2.1 Million Plea Goes To Voters Again June 10

A $2.1 million school bond issue—a replica of the one defeated only last January—will go before San Rafael voters June 10.

Even with January's bitter defeat still fresh in their minds, San Rafael Board of Education members last night unanimously and without hesitation voted to place the once-scarred issue on the ballot again.

And — depending on board action March 25 — the school district may gamble $40,000 in architect's fees on the outcome of the election.

On March 25, the board will decide whether to authorize the architectural firm to go ahead with preliminary plans of the school which would be built if the bond issue passes.

Board members were told yesterday that if the school were to be ready for the September 1970 session, work on the plans must be started now.

Board members had actually decided last week to place another bond issue before the voters in June, but they used yesterday's meeting to determine the amount to be asked for.

The board members had three basic plans to work from. The $2.1 million figure — which was approved — calls for construction of a middle school which will house 900 students. Or they could have cut the bond issue to $1.8 million by building a smaller school, one which would have housed 600 students. A third proposal was to build the smaller middle school and also cut back on construction programs at existing schools.

The tax increase for the $2.1 million issue is an estimated 10 cents on the present rate of $2.265 per $100 of assessed valuation, Supt. John Plank noted. It would be 8 cents on the $1.8 million bond issue and 7.5 cents on the lowest issue.

The board showed little inclination to seek the lower two figures.

Board chairman Lawrence I. Kramer noted that the difference in the tax increases was 15 per cent, yet taking the lower figure would mean cutting the school size by 33 per cent.

"That's just not good business," he said, "I could hardly recommend that to a client of mine."

The meeting — an adjourned session of the one last week — took only an hour and was carried out before only 12 onlookers, quite a contrast to the 100 or more who showed at the last

Sentinel Shift Gets Support

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Nixon picked up a powerful new congressional ally for his proposed "safeguard" anti-ballistic missile (ABM) system today when Sen. Richard B. Russell, D-Ga., endorsed it.

Russell, dean of the Senate and chairman of the Appropriations Committee which will control funds for the program, said Nixon's plan makes "good sense." He pledged to "support it vigorously and fully."

Meanwhile , evidence continued to indicate that, while the program will produce Nixon's first serious test of support in Congress, opposition to the "safeguard" system was much less intense than the criticism directed at the old Sentinel ABM program.

Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield said changes Nixon made in the ABM go "a good way to meet the objection" from senators.

Mansfield stopped short of endorsing the "safeguard" system, and promised a full examination by the Senate.

Belle Avenue Exit To Shut

The Belle Avenue off-ramp from Highway 101 will be permanently closed Tuesday as excavation work begins on the Ffith and Mission avenues northbound on-ramp, the state Division of Highways announced yesterday.

Highway officials advised motorists who now use the Belle Avenue exit to use the Irwin Street off-ramp instead.

The existing on-ramp on Belle Avenue will remain open until completion of the new on-ramp, highway officials said. They made no estimate of how long that would be.

New Shooting On Russ-China Border Island

MOSCOW (AP)—The second bloody clash in two weeks between Soviet and Red Chinese troops flared today on a disputed little island along their border, sparking a flurry of charges, countercharges and warnings of worse to come.

Moscow and Peking accused each other of starting what both called "armed provocation," and Moscow radio said there was an unspecified number of dead and wounded. The Chinese declared the latest round was "continuing and expanding."

The new incident touched off an exchange of protest notes between the two governments, while Moscow and Peking radio swapped charges.

BORDER ISLAND

Bone of contention was an island in the Ussuri River along the Manchurian border about 200 miles north of Vladivostok. The Russians call it Damansky Island and the Chinese refer to it as Chenpao.

Both nations claim the island, and they clashed over it March 2 in a skirmish which the Russians said left 31 of their soldiers dead. Both warned that the latest incident could have grave consequences, but they gave highly conflicting versions of what happened, as they did two weeks ago.

TWO VERSIONS

For example, Moscow said Chinese troops invaded the Soviet frontier post on the island yesterday and that a Chinese detachment attacked Soviet guards today. The Chinese protest referred only to a clash today and made no reference to the casualties reported by Moscow radio.

The Soviet protest to Peking, distributed by the Soviet news agency Tass, said that today a "big detachment of Chinese soldiers, supported by artillery and mortar fire, attacked Soviet guards who were protecting the island."

Peking radio, in turn, said Russian soldiers supported by a big convoy of armored cars and tanks intruded into Chinese territory near the island today. The broadcast said the Russians attacked and Chinese border patrols were "compelled to shoot back in self-defense.

Ship Missing Off Mexico

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A 580-foot Liberian ore carrier apparently sank early today in storm-churned waters of the Gulf of Mexico some 140 miles southwest of the mouth of the Mississippi River, the Coast Guard reported today.

Ensign Joseph Goeke, acting public information officer of the Coast Guard here, said the vessel, the Vainqueur, was carrying 34 persons and 20,000 tons of sugar.

He said the ore carrier sent an SOS at midnight and that no later communications had been made with the ship.

Rescue craft reported sighting an oil slick and a small boat with a damaged bow in the area at 7:30 a.m. today, Goeke said.

In addition, Marin Magazine readers will find all the popular regular features in the I-J's weekend supplement.

Dock Workers-Teamsters Split May Idle Vessels

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—A jurisdictional dispute between the Teamsters Union and the International Longshoremens and Warehousemens Union over the loading of containers could close down West Coast waterfront operations Monday.

The dispute, which has been festering for months, is centered on the question of whether teamsters or dockworkers should load containers at loading installations near the docks.

Tim Richardson, head of Teamsters Local 85 said yesterday his union had been informed that ILWU members "will refuse to handle any containers loaded by Teamsters."

Last November the Teamsters Union, which currently does the loading, went on strike against San Francisco piers after the job at one installation was taken from its members and given to a longshorman.

At that time the Pacific Maritime Association, the employer organization, filed unfair labor charges with the National Labor Relations Board and a court order ended the strike pending an inquiry to determine jurisdiction. The study is still under way.

Mutiny Trial Moved To Washington Fort

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—The mutiny courtmartial of five Presidio GI's will resume next Wednesday—almost 1000 miles away.

The trial was moved from San Francisco to Fort Lewis, Wash., yesterday at the request of the defense lawyers. A massive antiwar demonstration is planned for today on the Marina Green outside the Presdio and the lawyers argued that such activities might cause "a backlash" unfavorable to the accused.

Defense attorney Capt. Joseph Choate said that "no city in the United States is more antiwar or antimilitary than the city of San Francisco.

"Hippies have rallied on the side of the defendants, and who knows: These accused may be found guilty by association."

Presiding law officer Lt. Col. John G. Lee agreed to the change of venue, saying, "I'm just not at all sure they can get a fair trial in this area."

The defendants are among 27 charged with mutiny after a sitdown demonstration by prisoners to protest stockade conditions and the death of another inmate.

Three so far tried in San Francisco got sentences ranging from 14 to 16 years in prison. A fourth won a change of venue to southern California and got only four years for the same offense.

Five are now on trial, one is undergoing psychiatric examination, three have escaped and 14 are awaiting court action.

Lawmakers Ask Prison Jobs Reform

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — A report compiled by the Assembly staff urges that inmates be given paying jobs in private industry because prison work programs are unsuccessful.

The 68 - page report said inmates would be trained for higher paying jobs when they leave prison and could use the money earned while in prison to pay "room and board" and help keep their families off welfare.

"The inmate can only work at blue-collar or menial occupations," said the report released yesterday by Assemblyman W. Craig Biddle, R - Riverside, chairman of the select committee on the administration of justice.

"Even the most motivated inmate cannot, while in prison, engage in any work that would increase his opportunity to enter highly paid occupations upon release," it added.

About $5.6 million — 7 per cent of the current prison budget — would be paid to the state if each of the 3,100 inmates now in work programs paid $5 per day for room and board at the prison.

"If an inmate was considered a good employee while in prison, the firm for whom he worked should be expected to provide employment for him upon his release when an appropriate opening was available," the report said.

SAN QUENTIN

The researchers noted San Quentin used "old and obsolete machinery" to operate its cotton textile mill, Folsom Prison did not use automatic peach pitting equipment in its canning industry and paper production is outmoded.

The report said giving inmates jobs in private firms would eliminate the traditional competition between industry and the government over selling prison made goods.

The products inmates helped make could be sold on the open market.

To avoid a constitutional prohibition against contracting prison labor to private firms the inmates would have to volunteer for the programs.

TAX BREAK

A 50 per cent income tax deduction on plant operation costs for up to 18 months would be given to companies participating in the program. They also would receive a 10 per cent price preference over out-of-state firms on state purchases.

The inmates would be paid the normal prevailing wage, be required to conform to any union regulations and be entitled to all other benefits and programs offered regular employes.

Whales' Death Cause Sought By Scientists

LAGUNA BEACH (AP) — Scientists — including a Marinite — sought today to establish whether the death of six whales washed up on California beaches could be related to the Santa Barbara oil slick.

A black pilot whale, the latest casualty in the past seven weeks, was washed ashore yesterday at Laguna Beach, 140 miles south of Santa Barbara. The other deaths, of larger Pacific gray whales, occurred in Northern California.

Biologists said there seemed to be no connection between the Laguna Beach whale and the oil slick, which once blackened 800 square miles of ocean, killed hundreds of birds and trailed oily splotches over more than 100 miles of coastline.

Only one dead whale normally shows up on state beaches every other year, said Dr. Robert Orr of the California Academy of Science. From 6,000 to 8,000 whales migrate between Baja California and the Arctic this time of year.

Jerry Talbott of the San Francisco Bay Area's Tiburon Marine Laboratories, run by the U.S. Interior Department, said tests should determine if detergents and oil dispersants used to clear the Santa Barbara beaches could have killed the whales.

Blast Rips Schoolrooms In Israeli-Held Gaza

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

A powerful explosion ripped through a school in Israeli-occupied Gaza today, injuring 15 children, two of them seriously. One of the students lost an eye and another suffered severe chest wounds.

The 13 other children received minor injuries but were taken to a hospital for observation.

In another part of the city, students from an Arab girls school stoned passing vehicles on a main road to town in anti-Israeli violence.

The incidents were the latest in a series of disorders in Gaza and Israeli-occupied towns on the west bank of the Jordan River. The cause of the blast was not immediately known.

In Cairo, Egypt vowed today to recapture all its territory lost in the June, 1967, war and "liberate" the Israeli territory of Palestine.

In a statement published today by the semiofficial Cairo newspaper Al Ahram, the government said it was convinced political efforts to resolve the crisis would fail not only "because of Israel's expansionist ambitions but also because America's attitude was meant to deceive."

It also said the Arab "objective is the liberation of Palestine and not merely the liberation of the Sinai" desert seized by Israel during the six-day 1967 war.

In Jerusalem, Israel warned the Arabs that its troops would exercise one of "many options" against Egypt if Egyptian forces continue their artillery and shooting attacks along the Sinai front.

Alioto Tells Views On Campus Fight

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—"Except for the fact that we almost got killed, it was a very profitable trip," Mayor Joseph L. Alioto told an airport news conference yesterday.

The mayor returned home from an East Coast trip during which he was assaulted by radicals during an address at Georgetown University. He said he had suffered "only a glancing blow on the left cheek" during the Thursday night melee.

The radical demonstrators gathered outside the hall where Alioto was to speak to 700 persons and jostled him as he tried to enter. Other students protected the mayor but no police were called to the campus.

The mayor bemoaned the fact that the students assigned to protect him all wore glasses and then seemed unable to see when they took them off.

On a more serious note, he commented, "Direct physical attacks seems to be a new dimension of the SDS." Such violence, he said, was evidence of frustration among SDS members. He also suggested that much of the radicals' action was "drug induced."

The mayor again emphasized that university officials or mayors should not be "squeamish" about using police force to protect the right of free speech.

Sirhan Trial In Recess

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—The trial of Jordanian immigrant Sirhan B. Sirhan for the murder of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy was 10 weeks old today and the end was not in sight.

The trial, which got under way Jan. 7, was in recess yesterday to permit two of Sirhan's three attorneys, Grant B. Cooper and Emile Zola Berman, to attend a bar association meeting at Houston, Tex.

It is scheduled to resume Monday.

Land Duty Next For Bucher?

CORONADO (UPI) — Cmdr. Lloyd M. Bucher, the skipper of the USS Pueblo, is going to be reassigned to shore duty soon but the Navy won't give any specific details.

A spokesman for the Bureau of Navy Personnel made the disclosure of Bucher's immediate future yesterday, one day after the conclusion of a court of inquiry into the capture of the intelligence vessel by North Korea.

The five-admiral court heard from 104 witnesses and accumulated nearly 3,400 pages of testimony. The admirals' findings eventually will be passed through the chain of command to President Nixon.

There also were indications that the other 81 Pueblo survivors were going to have new orders soon although the Navy wouldn't say.

One of the crewmen, John W. Grant Jr., 21, Jay, Maine, told his mother on the telephone Friday night that men would be sent home in "a week or two."

A farewell party is scheduled for the Pueblo crew Monday night.

Shooting In China

HONG KONG (UPI) — Communist border guards opened fire today on a band of people apparently making a dash for freedom from Red China into this British colony, government sources said.

No one made it across. The sources said two persons died in the burst of gunfire at 4:20 a.m. and two others were wounded.

Guerrilla Held

MIAMI (AP) — A 21-year-old Marine deserter accused of murdering a fellow soldier-of-fortune at a secret Haitian guerrilla camp in the everglades surrendered to sheriff's deputies yesterday.

Charles Smith, 21, a Haitian, gave himself up.

Monroe County Sheriff Robert Brown had issued a wanted-for-murder bulletin for Smith Thursday, accusing him of killing Gerald D. Baker during a live ammunition maneuver Tuesday.

Travel Ban Stays

WASHINGTON (AP) — Travel by Americans to Red China, North Vietnam, North Korea and Cuba will continue to be frowned upon by the State Department — for the next six months at least.

The department's ban on such travel would have expired at midnight tonight if Secretary of State William P. Rogers had not acted yesterday to extend it.

Judy Remarries

LONDON (AP) — Judy Garland married her fourth husband for the second time today to make it legal.

"I feel like a 16-year-old," she said.

Bubbling with excitement, the 46-year-old American singer announced at the end of January she had married Mickey Deans, 35-year old New York discotheque manager, secretly in a Roman Catholic church ceremony Jan. 9.

Today's civil ceremony at Chelsea register office was necessary, she said, because they were married "in the eyes of God, but not in the eyes of the law."

American singer Johnny Ray acted as best man. Deans said he is co-owner of the New York discotheque with Sybil Burton, former wife of movie star Richard Burton.

Parks Damaged

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Floods and oil seepage have caused at least $700,000 damage to California beaches and parks, Parks and Recreation Director William Penn Mott said yesterday.

Mott told the state Park and Recreation Commission the estimate was of "indentifiable repair work" that must be done to restore the recreational areas.

But he siad damage to the marine life and the natural beauty of the Santa Barbara coast is "impossible to estimate."

The director also reported heavy Sierra snows will probably delay the opening of several mountain parks. He said the record snowpack could damage the areas when it melts.

Post For Fletcher

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former professional football player Art Fletcher, who made an unsuccessful bid to become lieutenant governor of Washington last fall, has been nominated as assistant secretary of labor.

If confirmed by the Senate, Fletcher will be one of the highest ranking Negroes in the Nixon administration.

Emergency Strength

LIVERPOOL, England (AP) — As a four-year-old girl lay screaming, trapped beneath a car, Mrs. Betty Doherty, 35, who weighs 210 pounds, pushed through the crowd and tried to lift the car.

"To my amazement," she said today, "the front right corner of the car came clear off the ground. Then I shouted to someone to grab the child."

The girl, Carmel Graham, is now home after two weeks in a hospital with head injuries. Her father, Frank Graham, says Mrs. Doherty and the other rescuer should get a medal.

A spokesman for Vauxhall Motors, which made the car, said Mrs. Doherty would have been lifting a weight of about 500 pounds.

The Guinness Book of Records says that in 1960 a Mrs. Maxwell Rogers of Tampa, Fla., lifted one end of a 3,600-pound car to extricate her son.

Snubs Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — German leftist student Karl Diettrich Wolff, 26, began his appearance before a Senate subcommittee by calling for Communist victory in Vietnam and ended it by walking out of the hearing.

In between he used obscenties, shouted insults at Chairman Strom Thurmond, R-Sc., and referred to members of the committee as "bandits."

Wolff was cheered on by about 30 youths who accompanied him to the hearing of the Senate internal security subcommittee yesterday.

Flood Easing

LISBON (AP) — The Tagus River was subsiding today after two days of floods in central Portugal, national radio broadcasts said.

Low-Cost Expo

SACRAMENTO (AP) — Officials of the California Exposition and State Fair plan a 19-day minifair this year featuring price attractions of the 1950s and 1960s.

They hope to attract a million customers by offering 5-cent games, 25-cent hot dogs and a top price of 50 cents on "big spectacular rides."

Sailors Protest

TOKYO (AP) — About 700 Japanese fishing boats staged a demonstration at sea today protesting proposed legislation that would make part of Tokyo Bay off limits for fishing.

Small fishing boats, ranging from 2 to 3 tons, held up traffic for about four hours. A spokesman for the fishermen said they would continue their demonstrations until the Japanese parliament turns down the bill.

Pueblo Protection Note Went Astray In Red Tape

WASHINGTON (AP) — A National Security Agency message suggesting protection for the USS Pueblo floundered in military channels while the intelligence ship was being sent on its last mission, says a House subcommittee report.

Although the message was directed to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the report says, it never reached them nor any other high command officers.

Rep. Otis G. Pike, D-N.Y., chairman of a House Armed Services subcommittee looking into the Pueblo capture by North Korea, read yesterday what he called a statement of facts. The report came after eight closed sessions by the subcommittee.

The statement said the NSA suggestion for protecting the ship was made on the day the mission was approved. The message, sent over the signature of the NSA director, was drawn up by a staff member and the director did not see it until after the ship was captured.

"The message did not object to sending the Pueblo but said consideration should be given to protecting it," the report said. It noted, however, the agency did not have the responsibility nor authority to question the risk of the mission.

O'Brien refused to approve the March budget for the Associated Students. He ruled that funds of the student government must remain frozen until the state attorney general's suit against the Associated Students is tried some months hence.

Federal judges denied a restraining order which would have halted the first of several scheduled trials next week of an estimated 480 protesters arrested at the college Jan. 23. The protesters claimed their constitutional rights of assembly and speech were denied by college rules against campus assembly.

Nesbitt Crutchfield, treasurer of the Black Student Union at San Francisco State, denied that he attempted to set fire to three parked cars. He said he was cleaning up paint with remover Tuesday when he was arrested. He denied any knowledge about a pair of gloves smelling of gasoline which police say they recovered near the area in which Crutchfield was first questioned. Crutchfield was released on $9,400 bail after being held on attempted arson charges.

Paul McMullen, chairman of the Your Elementary Schools Committee (YES), told the board he and his committee were "strongly in favor of seeking the $2.1 million figure."

The school board made it clear that if the June election fails, it will not try again for awhile, at least.

"If the voters knock this one down in June," board member John C. Pfeiffer commented, "then the citizens are going to have to come and ask us for what they want."

$2 Billion Plan To Bar Pollution

SACRAMENTO (AP — The chairman of the State Water Resources Control Board called yesterday for a water pollution control project in the San Francisco Bay and Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta that would cost an estimated $2 billion.

Kerry W. Mulligan said a regional agency — formed by 12 counties and communities as far away as Sacramento and Stockton — must handle the poblem.

"The problems are too large complex and costly for individual local districts to keep on handling," he said in remarks prepared for the California Water Resources Association.

Mulligan said the bay and delta are confronted with serious problems that cannot wait five, 10 or 15 years for solution.

State Education Board Ignores Birchite Charge

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—The state Board of Education took no action on a charge that the John Birch Society is trying to torpedo the state's sex education in public schools.

The board, which viewed portions of a controversial sex education film series, "Time of Your Life," is expected to act on the program at a meeting next month in Sacramento after committee and staff reports on the program are presented.

In yesterday's meeting, board member Dorman Commons of Fullerton said the John Birch Society's magazine devoted seven and a half pages of its January issue to an alleged Communist plot to undermine American values through sex education.

Commons said the Birch Society is responsible for much of the critical mail the board has received on the program.

"I do not think we should be led astray by the volume of mail," he said. "One thing that impressed me was the quality of the letters we received supporting sex education."

Thomas Harward, a physician from Needles who is vice president of the board, denied the Birch Society is involved.

Thoresen Arms Trial To Begin

FRESNO (AP) — San Francisco socialite William E. Thoresen III is scheduled go to to trial Monday in U.S. District Court in Fresno, nearly two years after Thoresen and his wife, Louise, were charged with illegal possession and transportation of firearms.

Federal authorities raided their fashionable mansion in the Pacific Heights area of San Francisco in April 1967 and found 77 tons of arms and ammunition. Among the weapons were 17 machine guns, nine submachine guns, two 20mm anti-aircraft guns, a bazooka and two cannons.

Four days after the raid Thoreson surrendered, posted $55,000 bail by certified check and began a series of legal maneuvers.

Early last year, a change of venue to Fresno was granted because of what was termed "prejudicial publicity" surrounding the case.

Trolley Crashes Leave 22 Hurt

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—A chain-reaction collision involving three Municipal Railway streetcars yesterday sent 22 persons to the hospital.

All but one was released quickly, however. Joseph Jackson, 53, San Francisco, driver of the rear car in the mishap was held for observation.

Police said the accident occurred when one car stopped for a red light and another stopped safely behind it. Moments later, the third car, operated by Jackson, crunched into the back end of the second, which hit the first.

leaders backed him, the growing number of ABM foes in the Senate opened up with both barrels, bringing an end to the Republican President's 53-day honeymoon with a Democratic-controlled Congress.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, called Nixon's "safeguard" ABM system a "multibillion-dollar boondoggle." Sen. Walter Mondale, D-Minn., called it "a tragic mistake" that would drain money from programs to help the poor.

Senate Democratic Whip Edward M. Kennedy, who has commissioned his own independent scientific study of the ABM, said Nixon had missed a rare opportunity to advance the cause of peace. Kennedy vowed to continue his fight, and California Sen. Alan Cranston also said he would oppose the plan.

Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., said Nixon's decision "opens the door to an escalated arms race." Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., said that as of the moment, he would vote against Nixon's proposal.

Warm Welcome, Cold Weather For Apollo Trio

SPACE CENTER, Houston (UPI)—Cheers and hugs, kisses and tears greeted Apollo 9's proud space pilots yesterday on their return to that "beautiful and welcome" place called home from a 10-day space mission that put a summer moon landing within the nation's grasp.

But the intensity of the welcome they received from wives, children, friends and fellow spacemen warmed their hearts.

The crowd of about 200 persons who waited for the men of Apollo 9 at the air base near the Houston space center started non-stop cheering the moment they landed. A brass band played martial music in the background.

Stolen Property Charge Lodged

William Arthur Maas, 44, of 737 Francisco Boulevard, San Rafael, was booked into Marin County Jail today on suspicion of possession of stolen property after he was stopped by police on a traffic charge.

San Rafael police said the license plates on Maas' car did not match and the rear plate turned out to be from a trailer stolen about two weeks ago in San Rafael.

Maas was held in lieu of $500 bail to appear Monday in Marin Municipal Court.

Astronauts Due Brief Lunar Visit

By SCIENCE SERVICE

Their exhaustive training notwithstanding, it will inevitably be with reluctance that the first astronauts on the moon turn from staring at the awesome expanse of barren rock with the earth suspended above, to the business at hand—the study and sampling of the lunar surface and environment.

These men will probably be the crew of Apollo 11, as yet unselected, who could reach the moon as early as July. How they will spend their precious time on another world is being planned down to the minute by the space agency, which is even mapping their footsteps in an effort to make the most of the few hours allotted to the climax of man's centuries-old lust for the moon.

The plan has been changed dozens of times in the past and will probably be changed several more. The latest schedule, however, gives the two astronauts just 22 hours on the new frontier, while the envious third man waits in orbit aboard the command module.

The Apollo 11 astronauts' first surface task — it would be their choice even with no official schedules — will be to make sure that the spidery lunar module spacecraft, their only link with home, survived the landing intact. At this, including a brief respite for a meal if excitement lets them eat, they will spend three and a half valuable hours.

The next item, incredibly, is eight hours of sleep. The fact that the first men on the moon may feel somewhat other than sleepy ("I might as well have been standing on my head on top of a flagpole, as far as going to sleep was concerned," said Astronaut Donn Eisele of his first night abourd Apollo 7) has not escaped the space agency, which plans to provide sleeping pills.

The snooze is necessary, the agency believes, to ensure that the crew will be alert for the rigors of walking in the moon's alien, one-sixth-normal gravity, and for the painstaking preparations for departure.

With their surface time more than half gone, the astronauts will at last begin preparing to leave the spacecraft and put their own feet on the moon. From various lockers and compartments, they will collect several hermetically sealable sample containers, along with specialized tools for gathering pieces of the lunar rock. A long-handled scoop and a pair of extended tongs will enable the astronauts to pick up surface samples without having to bend too far over in their cumbersome space suits. Several small cylinders, called drive tubes, can be stuck into the ground to collect samples from a foot or more below the surface.

Then both men will don their EVA space suits, designed to provide extra protection from micrometeorites and radiation during Extra-Vehicular Activity, and at last they will unpack a group of scientific experiments, to be deployed on the lunar surface. This, for many who can see beyond the adventure, is the real point of the space program — even if it takes a back seat in both headlines and budgets.

The first astronauts on the moon will deploy three pieces of equipment, all within some 30 feet of the spacecraft.

The first is a seismometer, designed at Columbia University's Lamont Geological Laboratory to detect tiny tremors in the lunar depths and report them by radio to earth. All the astronauts will have to do with the 100-pound device (which will weigh barely 17 pounds on the moon) is set it on the ground, open the solar panels which power the transmitter and align them to face the sun.

Scientists on earth will play an active part in using the second instrument, a multiple corner reflector at which they will shine the narrow beam of a laser, precisely timing the return signal to measure more accurately the distance from the earth to the moon. Last January, a team of researchers from five universities and two Federal agencies, headed by Dr. Carroll O. Alley of the University of Maryland, demonstrated the necessary aiming accuracy by shining laser beams moonward where they were photographed by Surveyor 7.

Besides Dr. Alley's group, other researchers planning to point lasers at the device include scientists at the U.S. Air Force, and in France and the Soviet Union. Both U.S. and Soviet scientists have bounced laser light off the moon in the past. Without the benefit of reflectors however, the moon's curvature so dispersed the light that returning signals were extremely weak and difficult to time.

The laser beam at first will be sent through the 60-inch telescope now being built for the University of Michigan's observatory on Hawaii; use of lasers at separated points could provide information on continental drift and possibly shifting of the earth's crust. Other studies that could benefit from the lunar laser reflector, Dr. Alley says, include measurements of the mass distribution, size, orbit and vibrations of the moon, as well as the earth's rotation rate and the cyclic wandering of its poles called Chandler's wobble.

The last experiment is a mission planner's dream, not only easy to set up, but weighing on the moon, less than three ounces. Designed by Dr. Johannes Geiss of the University of Berne, Switzerland, the first foreign scientist to have an experiment included on Apollo, it is a piece of aluminum foil, one foot by three, unrolled by the astronaut like a window shade and held upright on a telescoping stand. Aimed directly at the sun, the foil screen is intended to trap particles of the noble gases (helium, neon, argon, krypton and xenon) in the solar wind.

Driven at the solar wind's velocity of more than a million miles per hour, says Geiss, the particles should be embedded several hundred atomic layers deep in the foil. Rolled up again, the foil will be brought back to earth by the astronauts, where Dr. Geiss will melt it down, then measure the tiny amounts of trapped gas particles.

With all three experiments to be deployed within 30 feet from the spacecraft, the astronauts may not have time to get much farther away than that for sample-gathering. Some of the 135 scientists in nine countries waiting on earth for their NASA-allotted share of lunar rock are concerned that this may mean that all the samples brought back will have been contaminated by the spacecraft's exhaust during its descent. The space agency admits the possibility.

Once back in the lunar module, the two astronauts will spend the rest of their 22 hours checking out the vehicle's readiness for the ascent to rendezvous in orbit with the command module. Then it's back to earth.

Monday Is The Day Whole Universe Becomes Irish

By ED DENNEHY

St. Patrick died in Ireland in the year 461 but he's still making miracles!

Annually, on March 17, he transforms thousands and thousands of Americans into instant Irishmen. Italians, Poles, Spanish and Swedes, Protestants and Jews — many people of all races and creeds don Kelly green ties or green carnations to become Gaels for a day.

There's a green-hued spirit of brotherhood across the land as the Romanos, Sadowskis, and the Cohens step along briskly with the O'Briens, Kellehers and Murphys in the traditional parades. The skirl of bagpipes and the lively strains of Irish music sets them all tingling — Celts and temporary Celts alike.

What manner of man spawned this Irish Mardi Gras?

Historians write that Patrick, who gave Christianity a firm foothold in Pagan Ireland, was deeply religious and was a man of action. He possessed determination, qualities that were a must for his missionary work among the feuding Irish kings and clan chiefs of those boisterous days.

Stories of Patrick's exploits have come down through the years. Some are true. Some are legend.

Here is how he made an impression on Laoghaire, a Druid king.

A pagan festival was being held at the famed Hill of Tara. No fire was to be kindled until the royal fire had been lit. It was the night before Easter. Partrick lit the Paschal fire on the neighboring hill of Slane before Laoghaire's bonfire was ignited. The pagan king apparently took Patrick's challenge in stride. They became friends and the king put the saint under his protection although he did not embrace Christianity at that time.

The Christian missionary figured in another potentially dangerous incident in pagain Irish territory. He is reported to have knocked down a noted idol known as Cromm Cruaich, located on a plain in County Cavan. It has been a magnet of Irish for miles around that district.

It's ironic that most of Patrick's work of implanting the Christian faith took place in Northern Ireland, the scene now of strife among Protestants and Catholics. Patrick established his bishopric in Armagh in Northern Ireland in the fifth century. He preached and built churches in Northern areas and traveled frequently to Southern Ireland to spread the teachings of Christ.

In addition to his frequent trips around Ulster, historians find that he visited nearly every part of the green island during his 30 years as a bishop. References to sections that include the Shannon River, Cork, Dublin and other well-known areas occur in ancient writings.

Italians who are helping the Irish to celebrate this year have a special interest. Patrick was an Italian born in Britain. His real name was Magonus Sucatus Patricius. His father was a provincial official in Britain, then part of the Roman Empire.

Patrick born in Britain?

That gives the British a reason to help make Monday a great day for the Irish!

Horse Owner Accused Of Misdemeanor

Criminal charges were filed yesterday in Marin Municipal Court against Edward K. Wachsman, former member of the Marin County Planning Commission, whose neighbors on Palm Avenue in San Rafael are offended by his horses.

Wachsman pleaded innocent to misdemeanor charges of keeping horses without a permit and refusing to remove a public nuisance, and a jury trial was set for March 27 in Municipal Court.

Wachsman's attorney, Michael Dufficy, who is also a neighbor of the defendant, said that he and other neighbors are ready to testify that the horses do not bother them.

Complaints about the horses, in the Dominican section of San Rafael, were brought to the San Rafael City Council in December by neighbors, who said that Wachsman was not complying with an order to clean the horse area daily.

Dufficy said yesterday that a permit to keep horses was taken from his client by city authorities "arbitrarily."

Teen-Agers Cited For Vandalism

Marin juvenile officers reported yesterday that two Santa Venetia teen-aged boys have been cited to the probation department in connection with a wave of vandalism and a burglary in February in Santa Venetia.

The youths are Wesley Lee Sant of 44 North San Pedro Road and Mark Laufer, 17, of 2 Adrian Way, officers said.

They were accused of tire slashing, painting cars and stores and burglarizing the Ferrari stationery store on Feb. 26.

Busher Successor On Board Agenda

Marin County Board of Supervisors will meet in closed session during their all-day meeting Tuesday to consider the appointment of a successor to Probation Officer Walter H. Busher, who plans to retire by June 30.

Re request for an immediate replacement came from Juvenile court Judge Samuel W. Gardiner. The Marin Juvenile Justice Commission, headed by Rex T. Silvernale, also urged an early appointment.

Busher said yesterday he will leave before June 30, "but how much ealier I cant's say."

Busher, a Marin probation officer for more than 17 years, is paid $1,481 per month. When he announced his resignation on Jan. 6, he said he disagreed with some of the policies of the juvenile court judge.

County Administrator Alan Bruce announced last month that he planned to recruit for candidates statewide, have them screened, and then make his recommendation to the county board of supervisors. The recruiting has not yet begun.

Two men have publicly indicated interest in the job. They are John Wesley Brewer of Kentfield, member of the California Youth Authority whose term expires today, and Leo F. Shepherd, a program administrator at San Quentin Prison.

Both appeared before the juvenile justice commission on Wednesday to seek the job.

The supervisors are scheduled to consider the appointment at 4:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Marin Jury Finds Slayer Sane Enough To Execute

A jury of eight women and four men in Marin Superior Court decided yesterday that condemned San Quentin inmate Gerald A. Beivelman is sane enough to die.

The jury made the decision after two and a half days of testimony by psychiatrists and three hours of deliberation.

Beivelman, 30, convicted of the hammer slaying of a woman liquor store owner, was brought before the court on a petition by San Quentin Warden Louis S. Nelson to determine his sanity.

The law provides that a man must be same enough to understand that he is to be executed and for what crime. Beivelman is scheduled to die in the gas chamber April 16.

Prior to making their decision, jurors had listened to five psychiatrists, all of whom testified that Beivelman is psychotic to one extent or another.

Two Vacaville psychiatrists said yesterday that Beivelman, when they last examined him on March 5, had improved since a previous examination of Feb. 5.

Throughout the trial the condemned man sat with downcast eyes, seemingly unhearing. He spoke only twice during the proceedings, once to ask a juror if he thought an "insane man ought to be executed."

Bagley Predicts No Drilling In San Pablo Bay

The state Lands Commission probably will not allow oil and gas drilling in San Pablo Bay, in the opinion of Assemblyman William T. Bagley, R-San Rafael.

"It is my belief and hope that in view of the opposition — coupled with the disastrous Santa Barbara channel mess — that the commission will vote against permitting oil and gas drilling in San Pablo Bay," wrote Bagley.

The letter, addressed to Supervisor Chairman John F. McInnis, arrived yesterday. It was in reply to a letter sent by McInnis, putting Marin on record as opposed to drilling operations in the Bay.

The state Lands Commission will meet at 10 a.m. April 1 in Room 2170 of the State Capitol to decide.

Firemen Plan Drive For Hazards Cleanup

A committee of the Marin County Fire Prevention Officers Association met yesterday in Sausalito to plan an April spring cleaning campaign and future publicity to advise Marin residents on cleaning up or burning their garden debris this season before the backyard burning ban takes effect in December.

The committee's recommendations will be presented to the Marin County Fire Chiefs Association March 26, Sausalito Fire Capt. Ralph K. Pedersen said.

Youths Booked In Vandal Probe

Two teen-age boys have been cited to the Marin County Probation Department on suspicion of burglaries and vandalism at three schools in Santa Venetia after a neighbor noticed earphones stolen from the schools hidden under a rock.

Linked to burglaries at MacPhail, Las Gallinas and Santa Venetia schools were David Leon Wagoner, 16, of 10 La Brea Way, and Mark Christopher Ward, 14, of 65 Granada Drive, Corte Madera.

Juvenile officers said the youths had taken earphones and radios from the schools and done minor damage.

Sausalito Aide Ridicules Dr. Hayakawa

Sausalito appears to have hired a budding editor to be director of its teen center at Star of the Sea Church.

City Mgr. George M. Patterson recently announced hiring of Richard Paris, 23, of Fairfax, a graduate student and part-time teaching assistant at San Francisco State College, for the part-time job of directing the center.

On sale on the San Francisco State campus this week was a booklet, "The Sayings of Chairman Hayawaka," quoting Acting President S. I. Hayakawa —in and out of context — in an effort to make him look ridiculous.

The booklet, illustrated with cartoons by Roberta Christiansen, was edited by Richard Paris and Janet Brown, according to its inside cover. It carries the notice: "The money collected from the sale of this book will go toward bail bond, fines, legal defense aid, and AFT Local 1928 strike fund."

Local 1928 is the American Federation of Teachers local for teaching assistants at San Francisco State. It is on strike avowedly in support of demands of the Third World Liberation Front at the college.

(Richard Paris, the editor and recreation director, is not to be confused with Richard J. Paris of San Rafael, former Marin County probation officer who is scheduled to go on trial April 7 on marijuana and statutory rape charges.)

San Marin High Holds Runoff Vote

Carla Clements has won the position of junior class secretary at San Marin High School in Novato over Sue Dennis in a runoff election, according to student advisor Donald Nicholas.

The vote on Wednesday was so close that a runoff was required on Thursday. The results were announced yeasterday, although no vote was provided.

Mexican Restaurant's Building Too Far South

Tiajuana Tacos will have to move its building 16 feet to the north because it is not in the proper location, the Novato Plan Review Committee decided yesterday. Asst. Planning Director Warren Baker said, the restaurant had an approved plan for the building on Seventh Street, with the location clearly set on the lot. But when the foundation forms were set, the city measured and found that the building was too close to Novato Creek on the south, Baker said.

"We do not know who made the mistake, but the building is 16 feet south of its proper location, so the plumbing and foundation forms must be moved north," he said.

The Novato Plan Review Committee also:

SIGN — Approved a nonilluminated 32-square-foot sign for Stan's Ceramics at 813 Grant Avenue.

CHURCH — Approved the location of a church building for the Church of Christ at 1915 Novato Boulevard, but postponed until its March 28 meeting consideration of plans for the building.

POSTPONED — Postponed until March 28 consideration of a 49-unit apartment for Loyal Davis on the east side of Railroad Avenue south of Orange Avenue, and a request for an awning in front of the Camillo Restaurant at 5398 Redwood Highway for Camillo Magnisi.

Call Issued On Minority Housing

The Mill Valley Himan Rights Commission has issued a call for housing for low income or minority group famileies in Mill Valley, according to commission Chairman Roger J. Fleischmann.

In particular, Fleischmann said, the commission is asking persons interested in locating available housing to contact him.

The commission, meeting Thursday night, also agreed to meet twice a month on the first and third Thursdays at 8 p.m. beginning in April, Fleischmann said.

Speaker Is Set For Fifth In Lenten Series

Christina Baldwin, peace intern with the American Friends Service Committee, will discuss "Developing Strategy in the Quest for Peace" at the fifth in a series of ecumenical seminars at 7:45 p.m. Thursday at the Mill Valley Methodist Church, Sycamore Avenue at Camino Alto.

Miss Baldwin, 22, is a graduate of Macalester College in St. Paul, Minn., and works with the American Friends Service Committee on a full-time basis.

The center seminars, sponsored by five Southern Marin churches, are based on the theme, "Developing Strategies for Today's Social Dilemmas."

Film On Hunger To Be Featured At Church Rites

"Hunger In America," a CBS television documentary, will be shown during both the 9:15 and 11 a.m. services tomorrow at Faith Lutheran Church in Terra Linda.

According to Mrs. Ron Hicks of Santa Venetia, co-ordinator of the morning's activities, the 54-minute film will serve as a springboard to the question, "What Con I Do To Fight Hunger?"

Displays from organizations including the Mississippi Box Project and Meals For Millions will be featured, and a coffee and discussion period will follow the 9:15 a.m. showing.

Faith Lutheran Church is at 355 Los Ranchitos Road.

Group Will Not Press For Fee To Be Waived

The Marin Deputy Sheriff's Association will not press for a waiver of the $300 fee to sponsor a circus in June.

The association on Tuesday requested a fee waiver, but the Marin County Board of Supervisors postponed a decision and asked for more information on the circus.

Francelle Warner, assistant clerk for the board of supervisors, said that Raymond F. Barton, co-chairman of the association's circus committee, came in to pay the $300 fee. Barton also wrote to supervisors, merely asking for permission to put the Rudy Bros. Circus at Marin Catholic High School in Kentfield on two days, June 21 and 22.

A preliminary hearing was set for April 11.

Students Try To Stall Draft For Teacher

By JERRY MEGAHAN

Terra Linda High School students have collected more than 1,000 signatures on a petition in an effort to save one of their teachers from the draft.

The teacher, David Dwight, 24, says he is overwhelmed by the gesture, which is the brain child of seniors Steve Glicksman and Jay and Mark Avner.

"I'm flattered that students think so much of me that they would go to all this trouble to help me keep my job," said Dwight, who has passed his physical and probably will be inducted in April.

Principal Frank Stocking and Supt. John F. Plank have written letters to Dwight's Los Angeles draft board asking that he be deferred at least until the end of the school year.

"The petition got started when we heard that Mr. Dwight had passed his physical," said Mark Avner. "We were wondering what we could do to help. The petition was mainly Steve's idea."

In addition to the students, the petition also has been signed by 25 teachers, according to Clicksman.

SENATORS WIRED

One student didn't think the petition was enough. Martin Lawler sent telegrams to U.S. Sens. George Murphy and Alan Cranston and Rep. William S. Mailliard, R-Seventh District.

"Last night he got a reply from Senator Murphy saying that if the Los Angeles board would not postpone his induction until the end of the school year that we should be sure and let him know," Glicksman said. "That makes us a little more optimistic."

Dwight, the school's only psychology teacher, teaches four psychology classes and a math class in addition to functioning as an assistant track coach. He also chaperones most school functions and is in charge of an Explorer Scout Troop.

'MORE VALUABLE'

"We feel that Mr. Dwight is doing more valuable work here than he would be in the Army," said Mark Avner. "We feel he's deserving of our help."

The students may let the petition circulate one more day before sending it off to the draft board "before it's too late," Mark said.

"If I get deferred until the end of the school year," said Dwight, "the bulk of the credit would have to go to the students."

Youths Injured In Auto Crash

Three Petaluma teen-agers were injured Thursday at 2:30 p.m. in a two-car accident on Chileno Valley Road, near Petaluma-Marshall Road, five miles west of Petaluma, the California Highway Patrol reported yesterday.

Treated at Hillcrest Hospital for cuts and bruises were Alexander F. Bentley, 18, of 4669 Chileno Valley Road; Terry Blair, 15, of 7 Graylawn Avenue, and Robin Barcisco, 15, of 4291 Chileno Valley Road.

The highway patrol said the car driven by Bentley struck the rear of one driven by John J. House, 296 Wetmore Lane, Petaluma.

Big Parcel Of Sausalito Land Is Sold

Sausalito Properties has sold another big hunk of its Sausalito waterfront holdings to Sam Zakessian, Sausalito and San Francisco restaurant owner.

Deeds of sale for more than five acres of the prime waterfront land were recorded in the Marin County Recorder's office Thursday morning, bringing Zakessian's Sausalito waterfront holdings up to approximately 10 acres.

Two of the parcels, some .77 acres of filled land bounded by Bridgeway and Humboldt avenues and Locust and Litho streets, were sold to the Jolly Friars, Inc., a San Francisco restaurant chain in which Zakessian is a major partner.

Sale price for the property was not listed and the buyers requested that the documentary transfer tax stamps, which indicate sale price, not be affixed to the deeds until they are mailed, a recorder's office representative said.

DEED OF TRUST

A deed of trust of $56,000 for the two parcels was filed with the deed. The parcels have a fair market value of $69,000, according to the Marin County Assessor's office.

The other two parcels, both underwater blocks directly west of Zacks by the Bay, Zakessian's Sausalito restaurant, were sold to Zakessian himself. A deed of trust for $74,000 was recorded with the deed of sale.

One block, bounded by Humboldt and Donahue avenues and Pine and Turney streets, has a total fair market value of $77,000 including improvements which consist of houseboat apartments.

The other block, also 2.2 acres, bounded by Donahue and Railroad avenues and Pine and Turney streets, has a fair market value of $17,750.

Zakessian was unavailable for comment yesterday as to his plans for the property.

UNDERWATER BLOCKS

In September, Sausalito Properties sold two underwater blocks between Locust and Litho streets and Humboldt and Railroad avenues to Zakessian.

Four other blocks were sold to the Sausalito Yacht Harbor and the JHM Corp., headed by J. Herbert Madden, in December. Other partners in the corporation are Prentice Cobb Hale and John Metcalf, both San Franciscans.

Sausalito Properties still retains control of four blocks north of Litho Street between Humboldt and Railroad avenues and two blocks between Turney and Locust streets and Humboldt and Railroad avenues where the Sausalito boat yard is located.

Alexander M. Young, partner in Sausalito Properties, has said the corporation plans to retain ownership of the boat yard property but hopes to sell the other four blocks as soon as possible.

Sausalito Properties, headed by Young, E. Elmore Hutchinson and the late John Lord King, purchased the property in the early 1960s with plans to fill the land and develop it into a commercial residential area of waterfront hotels, motels, apartments and shops.

The City of Sausalito turned down the plans in 1964 and enacted a moratorium on bay fill within the city limits to prevent Sausalito Properties from filling the prime open water area.

Last July, Hutchinson warned the city that it had to enact some sort of plan for the central waterfront area or he would sell the property "in bits and pieces."

Press Suppression Unsound —No Less So On Campus

"WE DENOUNCE THAT more than 40 journalists are in prison in Castro's Communist Cuba. Many of them have been incarcerated for 3,688 days (as of Feb. 28)."

As of today, this notice could read 3,703 days.

Any way you read it, it adds up to a shocking 10 years-plus.

The notice appears in each issue of PRESS OF THE AMERICAS, a publication of the Inter-American Press Association (IAPA). It has appeared in every monthly issue since 1964 when the annual assembly of IAPA, held in Mexico City that year, voted to publish the notice regularly so long as Castro's Communist Cuba continues to suppress freedom of the press.

As a result of recent press suppression in Brazil, the IAPA plans to reschedule its 1970 annual assembly. It will take place somewhere other than Brazil as previously planned.

One newspaper was shut down for five days in Rio de Janeiro by the government of Brazil recently. Authorities also confiscated some editions of a paper in Sao Paulo. Newspapermen have been harassed; a kind of censorship has been imposed on the press of Brazil.

The IAPA has registered strong protests and sent representatives to discuss the situation with Brazilian officials.

Panama and Haiti are among other Latin American nations with press suppression in force.

It is not an encouraging picture, especially since only last October the IAPA's general assembly in Buenos Aires received a most optimistic report from its Committee on Freedom of the Press. Since that time there has been a rapid reversal; Freedom of the press is on the defensive once again in Latin America.

DR. S. I. HAYAKAWA WOULD do well to take serious note of all this in his dealings with rebellious student publications like the Daily Gater at San Francisco State College.

Anybody who reads the Daily Gater with any regularity and care knows that it is not a true newspaper any more; it has degenerated into an overgrown propaganda pamphlet, representing something much narrower and more restricted than a cross-section of student body opinion.

If the Gater were making any effort toward impartial news coverage, it would (1) attempt to eliminate one-sided accounts of campus happenings, (2) confine its political views to editorial columns as distinguished from news columns, and (3) provide for presentation of varying points of view.

If it does any of these things, the effort is so miniscule that it is not discernable even to the careful reader.

It is readily understandable that one who sits in a seat as hot as that occupied by Dr. Hayakawa would be happier to have the voice of the Daily Gater silenced, at least until it can be staffed by people representative of the rank and file of the student body and better informed about ethical journalistic practices.

But there has to be a better way than simply closing it down, even temporarily.

ROBERT J. MARKLE, assistant professor of political science at College of New Rochelle in New York, is among those who have observed that most campus newspapers are subsidized monopolies.

"The money to sustain them is either a tax on all students or a grant from the college (or public) treasury. . . These publications are subsidized through mandatory college fees or from the general college fund," Markle has written.

"Their purpose," he observed, "is allegedly to provide news of the college community and a vehicle for student opinion."

Actually, Markle reports, "these publications have tended to represent the views of a small number of students who monopolize the student press. . . Most important is the unwillingness of some college editors once in control to yield news space to fellow students. . . The adult community has some responsibility for turning freedom of the press into personal license.. . ."

The final sentence above would certainly be disputed by the leaders of today's campus dissidents.

Dissidents probably would refuse to believe that Markle is still under 30 — but he is, nevertheless.

GOVERNOR REAGAN IS unquestionably right when he says that campus disruptions probably would not have got so far out of hand if administrators had adopted a tougher line against them, sooner.

And the governor probably is right when he says only a tough-line administration will end disruptions and return peace and tranquility to our campuses.

But in the process we must beware of oppressive, suppressive measures like shutting down campus newspapers that disagree with "establishment" policy.

Editorial control of the Daily Gater should be made more broadly representative of the student body which subsidizes it, but it shouldn't be suppressed, even temporarily.

Administrators should not respond to campus press criticism, inflamatory as it may be, but resorting to the violence of suppression, even temporarily.

Acacias—Changing Moods

Acacias have just passed their prime in most of Marin. At the height of their blooming period, the cascades of golden blossoms are a splendid sight, truly beautiful, taken individually or collectively. But, at the same time, they sprinkle their highly allergenic pollen over everything, like the powder of a careless, dangerous woman.

Then the gold turns to brown and the rains make the trees resemble huge, very dirty dish mops.

It takes several months for the seed-pods to appear, tiny things that resemble pea-pods, and are a reminder that acacias belong to the pea family. These soon dry out and commence to fall. In this mood, big, brownish-purple seed clusters adorn the tree and litter the ground with every breeze from June to September.

Then, their natural job of seed-producing done, they send out new shoots of foliage, less dark-green than the old. Finally, on the tips of all the twiglets new buds begin to swell, and the cycle begins once again.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Special Section For Youth Needed

Some recent mental notes have developed into a letter. I have often wished there could be a section of the newspaper geared to the youngsters. (I think the New York Times has such a section.) We have children interested in the weather, the earthquake rumors, the recent school bond election, reports of a sea monster in South America, a 99-year imprisonment — in short everything they hear mentioned or spot in a headline — including marijuana and other drugs, the campus disorders and the war in Vietnam. The stories they attempt to read are often too long, too difficult or presuppose a knowledge or understanding they do not have. Perhaps just a page every week would be possible. It would encourage reading, help answer questions, and inform our newest readers. Incidentally, it would also start the habit of newspaper reading.

I was disappointed in the recent special travel section. There was no mention of inexpensive or reasonable travel suggestions for an average family.

A recent editorial comment charged that the blue-eyed, brown-eyed days at the Reed School was a subtle form of fostering or encouraging discrimination. If properly discussed and presented, I think it would be an effective way of proving how unfair and ridiculous any form of discrimination really is.

Home Owners, It's Time To Riot

It's about time for homeowners to riot! No less than four articles in the I-J so far this week (and it's only Thursday) have related new tax grabs proposed by politicians or educationists — and now a careless politician (speaking for the Bay Area Transportation Study Committee) has come out publicly with the brutal, cynical truth as to how they regard us.

"Property taxation poses no administrative or compliance problems and offers no opportunity for tax avoidance . . . and property tax rates can be readily adjusted to the means and circumstances of the area. . . ."

In other words, fellow homeowners, we're caught in our own traps: our homes can not be hidden, it's easy to collect because we must pay up or lose them, and they know they can always squeeze more out of us. . . .

LINES ON LIVING

Miracle Of Creation: 'I' That Embraces All

By RABBI HAIM KEMELMAN

"Let us make man," thundered God's voice across the empty void, whatever that may have been. To whom did He speak and for whose assistance did He call in making that historical mammal, man, in His own image?

He spoke, I believe, to potential man, as He held that lump of matter to fashion it after His likeness: I will endow you with the gifts of self, with a waking intelligence, with an experiencing consciousness, with an indwelling spirit and soul. But your task, man, is to fulfill that potential self within you into a creative selfhood, constantly unfolding and developing to full realization.

HUMAN LIFE was never meant to to be the creation of a full-blown perfect model, sprung from the head of God, immaculate and flawless. Man is in the making until the last rhythm of his fluttering heart is stilled. And the totality of a lifetime underlies his struggle for selfhood.

While the endowment of self is a gift, a God-miracle, the primacy of selfhood is an achievement. The miracle is man: a small heap of bones and tissues organs and nerves, glands and some gray matter called brain; a marvelous system of interconnected and interchangeable activities, sensations and feelings. What sparks the charges, the impulses that flow into our nerves to ignite in us the awareness of our consciousness, the recollections of our memories, the senses of our emotions? Ask the biochemist, the physiologist. You seek answers, refine definitions and come, at least, to define the indefinable and explain the inexplainable in a word: miracle!

That entralling self is God's creation and credit should be given to Him alone. But the unfolding of a creative and conscious selfhood, is man's work; and this is his achievement, his glory, his wonder.

As we bring into full play the conscious awareness of our total personality, we stand God-like on Olympian heights.

"I" CAN EMBRACE the whole world and experience the space relationships and time zones. "I" am in the universe, but the universe is also in the consciousness of "I." "The light," Fichte said, "is not without me, but within me, and I myself the light."

The "I" must be unveiled in a selfhood of original form, unrepeatable and uncomparable. "I" am the exclusive property of my individual person. I am affirming, denying, accepting, rejecting. I have a diary of my own, a private world and experience that can't be delegated to someone else. No one can step into my personal identity, nor take away my human birthright, in completing myself, in fulfilling myself, in accomplishing that work which God had begun in me, with me: "Let us make man," I can experience myself, I can create myself.

I, as far as I know, I alone, among other creatures, am witness to the Creator's imperial majesty and splendid immensity. I am still central, if not center, in creation, for I am testimony to the recognition of my intelligence. God needs me even as I need God. I am man because of myself, but I am more than what I am because I have a selfhood, awaiting my development in being the Creator's creator at work, affirming myself in the "sober certainty of waking bliss."

Viet Cong Offensive Stirs Anew Hawks' Demands For Bombing

SAIGON — Once again in this bitter, divisive war, an administration in Washington confronts a choice of evils. As in the past, the choice promises to make the American involvement more tangled and difficult.

For South Vietnam's president Nguyen Van Thieu the asnwer is easy. He advocated bombing of the north. While he does not quite say so, he would have the B-52s start the day-to-day pounding that for three years failed to stop the flow of men and material from north to south. This simple military prescription has a grimly familiar ring.

Granted, the provocation is great. The communist attack this time is nothing like as heavy as the Tet offensive a year ago. Yet it has taken a damaging toll — in a single week 453 American casulaties, more than in any week in nearly a year.

The shelling of Saigon produced new horrors in the slums of the city. It was random slaughter of women and children. The television film flown out of here a week ago was as sickening as any that has come out of the first war to be brought by TV into the living rooms of millions of families.

NEVERTHELESS, for all the pressure he must be under, it is hard to believe that President Nixon will order the bombing of the north resumed. His predecessor, Lyndon Johnson, wrestled with this decision as with none other in his five years in the White House. The decision was received with an enormous sense of relief all over the world.

Once started again, how can it be stopped? Or, rather, given a renewed and outraged demand to get the war over quickly so that Americans can move out, how can it be stopped short of the total bombing of the port of Haiphong and the dikes? This last was the pressure the Johnson administration had to resist.

The consequences on one score should be clearly understood. Whether with valid reason or not, the peace talks in Paris quieted some of the anti-Americanism generated by Vietnam. Renewed bombing would set off a wave of revulsion made manifest in demonstrations and violence. In Japan, where this reporter has just been, it could well bring down the government of Prime Minister Eisaku Sato and make a resonable settlement of Okinawa and the security treaty all but impossible.

TO A DEGREE hard to comprehend, Washington, under the Johnson administration at least, has been insulated from an awareness of what this tide of anti-Americanism means. One of Johnson's ablest and most loyal lieutenants, ending a world tour as one of the beneficiaries of the generosity of the Ford Foundation, put it this way on his last stop:

"I've been in 15 capitals in Europe and Asia and I've been amazed at the anti-Americanism I've found. I was everywhere except in Te Aviv and Athens, and to an ex tent I had never imagine possible. I only wish I ha made this kind of tour before went to the White House.

Under Sec. of State Dea
Rusk, the line was that th governments of most coun tries, even so-called neutra countries, were privately wit us but they had to be carefu what they said openly becaus of an extremist fringe. If tha were ever true, it has lon since ceased to be so.

THE BLUNT TRUTH is tha on Vietnam the United State had virtually no support pri to the decision to curtail th bombing and get down trying to talk peace in Paris.

For President Nixon, th heritage of the past has th taste of gall. Whatever h views may have been in th remoter past, the dilemm here today was not of his ma
ing. An Asian diplomat w has followed the course of t war over the years express it as well as anyone:

"Your president cannot blamed for what is happeni here. Responsibility for the rors of the past does not fall him. But if he were to ren the bombing in the north t would no longer be true."

Just four years ago on warning of his generals t the war was about to be l
Johnson ordered a massive crease in American gro troops. The present level 535,000 was reached. Yet terrible and relentless goes on.

Rewriting History Turns Hawks Into Doves—Or Something

WASHINGTON — It is only natural that those who served in the Johnson Administration want to be assured that they have their rightful place in history; and as time goes on, more and more Johnson officials will be leaking to the press the roles they played in some of the decisions that President Johnson had to make.

Just the other day Zachiariah Slododkan, who used to work in the White House, came to see me.

"You know I was always a dove on the Vietnamese War" he told me.

"ISN'T THAT funny?" I said. "I always thought you were a hawk. I remember meeting you at a party a few years ago, and you defended everything that Johnson was doing."

"That was just to throw you off," Zach said. "But in my conversations with the President I always advocated accommodation with Hanoi. I did this against Rensellear and Throwback, who were the real hardliners in the White House."

"I thought Rensellear was for halting the bombing in Vietnam."

"He wanted everyone to think that, but in the meetings with the President, Kornbean and I were the only ones who spoke up."

"BUT WEREN'T you the one who wrote the original speech stating that we had to make Hanoi come to its knees?"

"I wrote it against my better judgment. Drewhistle came up with the idea, and the Preisdent ordered me to write it up. Then Drewhistle last week in the Times said I was responsible for it. That wasn't the first time he's played that game."

"But Zach, I remember a speech you made at the University of Michigan attacking the entire press corps for its coverage of the Vietnamese War, and saying that we were misleading the American public about great victory we were winn over three."

"I was misquoted."

MINIMIZING PRESENCE

U.S. Bows To Japan's Will On Bases

TOKYO (AP) — Scattered across Japan are more than 100 U.S. military bases and installations intended as links for a U.S. defense shield for Japan. Instead many of them have encouraged anti-Americanism.

In an effort to reduce public resentment and political controversy, the United States last December offered to move, relinquish or share with Japan 41 of the 148 facilities.

The move, the United States explained, would permit it to continue protecting Japan under the U.S.-Japan security treaty but with a minimum number of necessary bases.

Control over 10 of the 41 facilities were offered outright to Japan. They include training grounds around Tokyo and Hokkaido, Japan's northermost main island, and several installations and recreation areas in Yokohama and Yokosuka.

The U.S. offer was welcomed, although many Japanese agree the United States must maintain its bases in Japan to defend this country.

Most of the more explosive anti-U.S. protests have been encouraged by leftists and pacifists who want all U. S. military bases closed. The bases, they argue, expose Japan to retaliatory attacks if the United States gets involved in a war with another powerful nation.

Their opposition manifested itself most volently last year in student riots over the visit of the nuclear-powered aircraft carrier Enterprise to the U.S. naval base in Sasebo, in southern Japan.

The military installations, the leftists warn, will be prime targets in a drive to scrap the security treaty which comes up for review next year. The United States maintains its bases under the treaty.

Besides leftists, air bases and other installations have been criticized by the public for their "nuisance" factor. This is because many of them were built originally in unpopulated areas but are now engulfed by expanding urban centers.

Last summer residents of Oji, in Tokyo, demanded relocation of a new military hospital for Vietnam casualties in their area, claiming the soldiers might bring contagious diseases with them. The United States agreed to relocate the hospital if an alternate site is found.

In Tokyo and Yokohama, public officials say U. S. facilities occupy land which should be used for much-needed housing projects. And communities encircling air bases have raised complaints—not unfamiliar in the United States—about jet noises and the dangers of plane crashes.

One major installation which the United States has offered to relocate because of its proximity to heavily-populated cities is a U. S. Air Force base at Itazuke, in southwestern Japan. A series of major demonstrations occurred last year after an F4C Phantom from the base crashed into the campus of Kyushu University. There were no injuries.

The number of U. S. facilities in Japan today are a far cry from the 2,824 bases which the United States maintained in 1952, when it ended its World War II occupation of Japan. The bases of 1952 covered 487 square miles; the installations at the end of 1968 covered 131 square miles with only 55 square miles exclusively under U. S. control. The others were shared with Japan's Self Defense Agency.

Most of the U. S. installations are for communications. But there also are barracks, storages, training grounds, hospitals, naval bases and airfields. The U. S. military strength required to man them: about 41,000, half of them Air Force personnel.

The size of the U. S. military presence is not expected to be reduced sharply under the proposed changes. The monetary savings have not been tabulated.

Several bases which the United States will continue to maintain are linked to the war in Vietnam. Sasebo and Yokosuka serve as rest and recreation ports for sailors aboard warships operating off Vietnam, while planes ferrying troops to and from the war refuel at Misawa, northern Japan, and Yokota, southwest of Tokyo.

The United States also has other air bases — Atsugi, Fuchu, Johnson and Tachikawa, near Tokyo; Itazuke, near the port of Sasebo, and Iwakuni in western Japan near the Inland Sea. Planes from most of them conduct reconnaissance, rescue or anti-submarine patrols.

The U. S. decision to minimize its military presence has encouraged talk that Japan may be forced to beef up its own military defenses. The idea is not unpopular in a nation which prides itself for its pacifism after World War II, reflected in a constitution which renounces war except for self-defense.

Japan's military is represented by its Self Defense Agency, equipped mostly with U. S. planes, ships and weapons. It has authorization for a force of 250,000 men, but is about 10 per cent under strength.

The United States, deeply embroiled in Vietnam, is reportedly anxious to minimize its commitment in this part of the world — but without endangering the region's security.

It has encouraged Japan to assume a greater measure of responsibility for its own and Asia's defense.

But Japan, its international prestige regained by economic progress, is ambivalent about the kind of role it wishes to take on in Asia.

THIS WEEK In The World

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

The skyway to the moon lay open to America's astronauts at week's end, after the successful completion of the 10-day Apollo 9 mission which proved the space worthiness of the nation's lunar landing ship.

The U.S. space schedule calls for one more test flight in May before the historic first landing on the moon is attempted next summer.

The Apollo 9 splashed down in the Atlantic Thursday less than a mile off target and the threeman test team—Air Force Cols. David R. Scott and James A. McDivitt and Russell L. Schweickart, a civilian—was welcomed aboard the recovery ship Guadalcanal.

"Apollo 9 was as successful a flight as any of us could ever wish for, as well as being as successful as any of us have ever seen," George E. Mueller, associated administrator for manned flight of the National Aeronautics and Space Agency (NASA), told newsmen at the Mission Control Center in Houston.

Deke Slayton, director of Apollo flight crew operations, described the flight as "five days of panic followed by five days of boredom."

The comment reflected the dual nature of the mission—a period of testing for the untried lunar landing module, during which it was docked twice with the command module and operated for a time on its own, followed by a relatively routine five-day cruise in earth orbit.

Plans for the moon landing envision a dropaway to the lunar surface by two astronauts in the landing module while a third man in the command module orbits the moon. After a short stay on the earth's oldest satellite, the two moon leaders are to return in the landing ship and dock with the command module for the flight back to earth.

Both of Apollo 9's dockings proceeded without a hitch. On a similar test in March, 1966, Gemini 8 went into an uncontrollable spin and had to make an emergency splashdown.

Around The World; Around The Clock:

Saigon—A second week of heavy U.S. casualties in Vietnam, with 336 dead, suggested that the enemy is enjoying some success in what officials in Saigon regard as an effort to put pressure on the Nixon administration through disproportionately heavy American battle losses.

Washington—The Senate ratified the international agreement to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons, and speedy U.S. ratification is expected. The treaty becomes effective when it has been ratified by the United States, Russia, Britain and 40 other nations. It has so far been ratified by 10 nations, including Britain.

Coronado—The Navy court of inquiry into the loss of the intelligence ship Pueblo ended with its captain, Cmdr. Lloyd M. Bucher, defending his surrender of the vessel.

NATION'S AUTO CRITIC

Ralph Nader Means Many Things To Many People

WASHINGTON (UPI) —Depending on who's talking, critic Ralph Nader is:

1—A muckraker.

2—A consumer crusader.

3—A publicity-seeker.

4—A public defender.

For example, last month Federal Trade Commission Chairman Paul Rand Dixon described Nader's critical report of the FTC as a "smear."

But a few weeks earlier, former transportation secretary Alan S. Boyd named Nader to the National Motor Vehicle Safety Council —which advises the government on auto safety.

RALPH NADER
Praised, scorned, too

SENATE BACKERS

Nader is welcomed in the offices of such key senators as Warren G. Magnuson, D-Wash., and Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis. But his name is anathema to General Motors or Volkswagen —two longtime targets of Nader's criticisms.

If nothing else, most of Nader's friends and enemies agree that the title of lobbyist fits him best. But they also agree he is not the garden variety Washington lobbyist.

Nader never gives a cocktail party. He is not paid by any special interest. His office is something less than swank —a one-room affair in a downtown office building.

He does his own research, types his own "outraged" letters to government officials and hand delivers his news releases to newsmen.

Nader, a Harvard-educated lawyer, is prone to working 12-hour days, and has developed an amazing pipeline through which are funneled the tips, and unpublicized reports and research which form the basis for his criticisms.

THE RESULTS

What is the result of it all? Ask the auto industry, the drug industry, the gas pipeline industry, the fish and meat industry, the coal industry, the tire industry and anyone associated with the over-all problem of concentrated economic power.

Nader has criticized each of them. Supporters claim his criticism is valid, and possibly the only way to get results. His critics differ. They call Nader often inaccurate, unethical, and vindictive.

As for Nader himself, he describes his work this way: "I see myself as some lawyers should be —there have to be lawyers who don't represent the special interests. Otherwise the depredations which my legal brothers are inflicting upon society as a lobby for the corporate interests will continue unabated."

To expand this philosophy, Nader has some grandiose plans. Still in the courts is a $26 million lawsuit against General Motors stemming from the auto firm's attempt to investigate Nader following his widely publicized initial attacks on the auto industry.

If he collects, Nader hopes to set up a consumer foundation employing "young lawyers, economists, and scientists whose job it will be to represent the public interest in Washington."

NOT WAITING

Nader is not waiting for the court decision, however. He told UPI he is trying to convince one of the major philanthropic foundations to give him a grant to begin operations.

The question of money is the one most often raised by Nader's critics—where does he get it? Or more bluntly put: Who pays him to do what he does?"

Nader makes no secret about his finances. "Most of my income comes from lectures, some of which come as high as $1,000," he says.

"I get as many as 20 invitations a week — and if I accepted them all I would not be able to do anything else — much to the delight of my opponents."

Nader also teaches a course at Princeton University on the corporation. Added to this are the royalties from his bestselling book, "Unsafe at Any Speed," which Nader said "grossed about $60,000."

SPARTAN LIFE

Nader leads a Spartan-like existence. He doesn't own a car. He lives in a rooming house in downtown Washington, and even though he is a 34-year old bachelor, he takes little time out for social activities.

Nader's most closely guarded secret is his unlisted telephone. But he tells of getting a call "at 3 a.m. from an irate car owner in Switzerland."

Other car owners are constantly trying to track him down to take their accident case — something he never does. But a good share of his business is done over the telephone. So much so, Nader says, "that the phone bill runs around $500 a month."

What is accomplished by all this? Nader feels the main effect has been to interest the public in the idea that it should have someone to protect its interest just as business does. Nader claims that "99 per cent of the mail I get is favorable. People send me everything from defective emergency brake handles to shock absorbers."

MAIN GOAL

But his main goal is to influence legislation. It is not possible to pinpoint his accomplishments in this field. Most observers agree, however, he does deserve a share of the credit for new auto safety standards, tire standards, and legislation to regulate the meat and poultry industry.

Whether he wins or loses, Nader says he "expects to be around Washington for a long time."

Behind The News

PARTISAN LINES DRAWN

State's Lawmakers Determined To Subdue Campus Antagonists

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — California gave birth to the 1960's campus rebel, but this year the state's lawmakers are determined to subdue the troublemakers.

Up for consideration by the lawmakers are about 80 bills meant to get the dissidents off campus and, in some cases, behind bars.

Legislators have considered everything from building walls around the schools to selling them. Their decisions may well influence legislative action elsewhere.

Almost certainly the result will be a tightening of government control over higher education.

PARTISAN POLITICS

Another result has been the entrance of partisan politics into the higher education scene. Most of the restrictive legislation was presented by Republicans, and members of both parties accuse the other of exploiting the situation for political purposes.

The Legislature has shown a new reluctance to approve educational reform and a new willingness to cut college budgets.

Gov. Ronald Reagan believes "violence itself" has become the issue, and recent polls indicate that many Californians agree with him, as do people around the nation.

"The issue is simple," Reagan says, "the orderly process of education can't go forward in an atmosphere of violence."

CAMPUS PATROLS

So Reagan sent the National Guard and California Highway Patrol to University of California's Berkeley campus, and asked the Legislature to pass four get-tough measures to:

Expel any student convicted of a crime connected with campus violence and keep him out of state schools for at least a year.

Require that no teacher fired for taking part in campus disturbances can be rehired for at least a year without specific approval by the school's governing board.

Charge with trespass any student who is suspended or expelled in connection with campus violence and returns without permission.

Ban the use of public address systems on campus without the permission of campus authorities.

Reagan ran for governor in 1966 with talk about cleaning up the "mess at Berkeley," and now the California Legislature is acting, largely prompted by the months of violence at San Francisco State College and U.C. Berkeley.

The state Senate has already passed and sent to the Assembly two bills which would make it a felony to assault a campus police officer and enable school officials to exile from the campus anyone they believe would disrupt the educational process.

Two Assembly committees have concerned themselves primarily with college violence legislation. A subcommittee on educational environment has plumbed the causes of the demonstrations, as well as the cures. Its members have heard everyone from dissenting students and professors to administrators and policemen.

Another Assembly committee has been charged with screening the mass of antiriot legislation to eliminate duplication and come up with some kind of cohesive plan.

GOV. RONALD REAGAN
Vows a cleanup

Among proposals now in the works are bills that would:

Require students to sign an oath agreeing to obey campus rules or be expelled.

—Deny state scholarships to ed penalties for nonstudents who take part in campus disruptions.

Provide a scale of graduat- students convicted of violations of law on campus.

Make it a misdemeanor to display the flag of a foreign nation at war with the United States if there is danger of inciting a riot.

Remove the regents of the University of California from state constitutional status and make them subject to statutory control.

A BERKELEY WALL?

Legislators once talked about walling off the University of California at Berkeley and setting up a Berlin-style "checkpoint Charlie" system requiring the 40,000-plus students, faculty members and employees to show identification before being admitted.

Such a system was used successfully at the much smaller two-year College of San Mateo following violence there, and Assemblyman John L. E. Collier, R-Los Angeles, thought it might work at Berkeley.

The prospect of selling the university and state colleges came up early this year when state General Services Director Andrew Lolli said he had received an offer from a private group that was interested in buying.

At least one state senator was enthusiastic about the idea. Republician John Schmitz of Tustin, the Legislature's only member of the John Birch Society, said that under such an arrangement demonstrators "would think twice about continuing to threaten to close down our state college and university system."

Nixon's Trip Brings To Head Leader Issue

By YORKE HENDERSON

LONDON (London Express) — President Richard Nixon's whirlwind tour brought to a head an issue which has been troubling Europe for some time now: Who speaks for Western Europe?

One man has never been in any doubt about the answer: Gen. Charles de Gaulle, the apostolic successor of Charlemagne, Louis XIV and Napoleon.

As originally conceived, President Nixon's itinerary gave the impression that America took De Gaulle at his own estimate.

The emphasis was on Paris. Plainly time and trouble would have to be expended on De Gaulle. As just another European, "an equal among equals," his resentment of American influence and his flirting with both Communist blocs and the Arab world would have been no more than troublesome. But, as the dominant pace-setter of Western Europe, they could be frightening.

But that was before Britain started to flex its diplomatic muscles.

Officially, the British are still committed to the idea of becoming members of the Common Market in Europe. But they are not prepared to wear the idea of belonging to an organization dominated by either De Gaulle or France.

This attitude on their part is not born of De Gaulle's repeated "non" to their application for Common Market membership.

In fact, cause and effect are the other way about. The French leader's intransigence springs from his unshakeable conviction that, once in the Common Market, the British would take over.

In the event, President Nixon's tour was preceded by a sequence of significant events.

First, Britain's defense minister, Dennis Healey, in Bonn for a European defense conference, stood up and said all the sort of things Europeans like to hear.

Effectively he warned the U.S.A. that if it made significant cuts in its conventional — that is, nonnuclear — military commitment in Europe the nuclear threshold would be lowered; adding that such an increased reliance on nuclear retaliation might breed a demand for the appropriate weaponry, independent of American control.

Would an American Trojan Horse (reportedly De Gaulle's description of Britain in relation to Europe) whinny thus defiantly?

Next, Healey demonstrated that — unlike Charles de Gaulle — he could make bellicose noises at the Russians. It would take only minutes, he reckoned publicly, to nullify Russian naval units in the Mediterranean in the event of war.

Could the utterer of such a warning be other than unshakeably pro-American?

About the same time Britain became very active in the European organization to which it does belong — the Western European Union. So active that they created in De Gaulle's mind the idea that they were using the union to maneuver themselves into the Common Market.

The general's reaction was unsurprising. France began telling the other union members what they could and could not do. They couldn't hold get-togethers without France and, as it happened, France didn't see the need of any such get-together at the moment.

Even the Germans weren't going to stand for that, and De Gaulle suffered the salutary experience of seeing his Common Market partners lining up with Britain against him.

Then, for a moment, it looked as if the General might be reasserting himself. The Germans unaccountably began to waver in their defiance of De Gaulle.

That was when the British played their trump.

Almost on the even of President Nixon's tour, they told the Germans, and the other Europeans concerned, that in an intimate conversation with Britain's man in Paris, Christopher Soames, De Gaulle had suggested talks between Britain and France about a massive realignment of European nations in both political and defense terms. America would be excluded. Britain, France, Germany and Italy would make up a sort of inner cabinet.

Virtuously, the British explained that they felt it only right that the others should know what the General had in mind.

France was still indignantly insisting that the British had badly misinterpreted what the General had told Soames, and the British were sorrowfully saying, no they hadn't, when President Nixon flew in.

By that time the Germans had stopped vacillating in De Gaulle's favor, and it had been effectively demonstrated that, for the moment anyway, Charles de Gaulle wasn't speaking for Europe.

Now, the whole sequence could have been inadvertent.

The French don't think that it was.

But either way, it must have convinced President Nixon that in considering who speaks for Europe, he would do well to keep Britain in the front of his mind.

International News Puts Bearish Mood On Market

NEW YORK (UPI) — The sound of retreat echoed through the stock market this week as Wall Street received a bitter reminder of the rough road that lies ahead in Vietnam. Trading was moderately active.

While Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird, returning from a four - day inspection tour of South Vietnam, said it would be both "desirable and possible" to make some reductions in the United States forces this year, President Nixon seemed to rule out such action for the immediate future.

Renewed talk that another hike in the prime rate—responsible for much of the selling pressure earlier this year—will be forthcoming, combined with comment from Treasury Secretary David M. Kennedy that the government is determined to continue necessary monetary restraints to slow inflation, also fostered bearish sentiment.

David Rockefeller, chairman of Chase Manhattan Bank, said another prime rate advance "is just a matter of time." The rate charged to a bank's major customers with class A credit ratings now is at an all-time high of 7 per cent following three increases since last December.

Some additional bearishly construed items included the resumption of gunfire in the Middle East, and a heavy British trade deficit which pressured the pound sterling and again touched off monetary fears just when traders were celebrating France's ability to avoid devaluation of the franc in the face of mounting labor unrest.

Word from Washington that existing conglomerates — firms which link up with other concerns in diverse industries — may face possible antitrust action, and a Commerce Department survey that manufacturers expect a sharp slowing in sales growth in the first-half of this year were other major headaches to investors.

HOW TO PLAY
WINNING BRIDGE

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

Redouble On Third Round Is Cue Bid To Show Singleton

During a slam auction you may bid a suit to show the ace, and an opponent may double to show length and strength in the suit. If your partner redoubles, he tells you not to worry about an opening lead in the doubled suit. He has the king or singleton to take care of the second trick in that suit, just as you promise the ace or void to take care of the first trick.

You hold:
♥ Q 9 8 7 4
♦ 10 6
♣ K Q J 9 4.

What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid four hearts.

This jump to game shows strong trump support (often five cards or more) with a singleton or void in a side suit and some sort of high-card strength but not more than nine points in high cards.

Opening lead — ♣ K

TO SHOW ACE

In today's hand for example, South bids four clubs to show the ace of that suit and to suggest a slam at spades. South does not promise any particular length in clubs.

West's foolish double shows length and strength in clubs. This kind of double makes sense if North is going to be declarer since then East may need help in finding a good opening lead. When West himself is going to be the opening leader the double tends to help the opponents.

In this case North redoubles to show that he has the king or a singleton in clubs. North would not redouble with general club strength because it is too unlikely that South will want to play at four clubs redoubled when he is obviously considering a slam in spades.

ENCOURAGES SOUTH

The news that North has help in clubs encourages South to go on to a slam. If North passed the double of four clubs, indicating club weakness and minimum values for his bidding up to that point, South would probably settle for a mere game contract.

South has no trouble in the play. He takes the ace of clubs, ruffs a club with the nine of spades, returns the low spade to the jack, ruffs another club in dummy and draws two more rounds of trumps. He then cashes the top diamonds and ruffs a diamond.

SLAM SAFE

If the diamonds broke favorably, South would make seven. As the cards lie, South eventually gives up a heart trick, but his slam is safe.

Five Courageous Men (And A Cat) Vs. The Sea

By JACK SCHREIBMAN

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Five men, alone in their little sailboats, embarked at noon today on one of the toughest yacht races anyone could dream up—6,000 miles from San Francisco to Tokyo.

It is the first singlehanded transpacific race in yachting history, and will be a grueling test of courage, skill and equipment.

The acknowledged favorite to win is Frenchman Eric Tabarly, winner of the 1964 solo transatlantic yacht race, who is sailing the racing machine Pen Duick V, a 35-foot engineering marvel.

Tabarly's boat is made of aluminum, boasts ballast tanks for increasing stability and a dozen other gadgets including a trim tab on the keel for improving balance.

The only other Frenchman in the race is Jean-Yves Terlain, sailing a 30-foot fiberglass sloop, Blue Arpege.

The lone American entrant is Jerry Cartwright of Portland, Ore., in the boat he built himself, the 29-foot fiberglass sloop Scuffler II. He's taking a cat along — Henry.

Rene Hauwaert, a Belgian who calls himself a "tramp," is sailing his elderly gaff ketch Vent De Suroit (Southwest Wind) "for the fun of it."

These four are following the same strategy — head southwest and ride the tradewinds north of Hawaii right across the ocean, then turn north to Japan.

Claus Hehner of Germany, in the 35-foot steel sloop Mex, is the only entrant who will travel the great circle route, taking him about 1,000 miles south of the Aleutians. It is the shortest route, but the roughest, since he will be punching into head winds.

All the entries, highly independent men, are fascinating characters, befitting the kind of adventure they are on. They made final preparations this week at San Francisco Yacht Club in Belvedere and started the race from the St. Francis Y. C. in San Francisco.

ij Sports

Tabarly is an iron man, small wiry and powerful physically. He hardly speaks at all. His friends say that when he sails solo he sleeps at night only an hour at a time, in the belief that the man wins who sleeps least.

He is disgusted about the race rule that he must carry 45 gallons of water. Tabarly likes wine. He likes huge compasses, because he can sail a more accurate course.

Terlain is affable, talkative, and methodical about his preparations. But pre-race tension didn't keep him from taking Blue Arpege out last night for a leisurely sail at sunset in light winds. Besides his sailing, he'll be kept busy on the long voyage making movies he hopes will be part of a television special.

Cartwright, who has a gorgeous wife and is considered mad to leave her ashore while he sails off by himself, sounds like a cowboy, is easy going but fiercely determined to prove himself and his boat, which has no toilet, no motor, no transmitter and only bare navigational equipment.

Cartwright got ruffled when someone suggested he was taking Henry, the cat, as emergency food.

Hehner, an architect, pays painful attention to everything on his beautiful racer. He is soft-spoken and friendly to everybody, and personally supervised the loading of schnapps and beer on his vessel.

Hauwaert is everybody's favorite. His beat-up old ketch, which he's been sailing all over the Pacific alone for four years, was always swarming with visitors.

A spartan fellow with limited funds who is used to doing without, he was highly put out at the rule which demanded he put on lifelines.

But he is proud of his transmitter, a two watt radio that couldn't reach across San Francisco Bay.

Sponsor of the race is the Slocum Society, named for the yankee captain, Joshua Slocum, who in 1898 became the first man to circle the world alone in a small boat, the Spray. The society has about 500 members around the world, all interested in long, lone passages in little boats.

Determined Davenport Battles The Whiz Kids

PHOENIX—Each spring some whiz kid is supposed to run Jim Davenport into retirement. And each spring Davenport hangs on just a little harder.

It isn't getting any easier for the going-on-36 veteran but he still has that weathered look of old leather and determination. Nobody will be surprised if Davenport is at his old third base stand when the new baseball season opens.

At the moment there is an awful lot of traffic at third. Clyde King, the rookie manager of the Giants, is giving Tito Fuentes, Bob Etheridge and Charlie Smith a shot at the hot corner which Davenport has handled so ably on a full or part time basis ever since the Giants moved west more than a decade ago.

Five seasons ago it was Jim Ray Hart who was supposed to run Davenport into the ranks of the unemployed. The contrast between Hart's glove and the golden one of Davenport was painful to watch. So Davenport went back to third and Hart to left field where the young slugger does a reasonably respectable defensive job.

Etheridge Back For Another Try

Two seasons ago Etheridge was the wunderkid who was going to be Davenport's successor. Etheridge hit .325 at Phoenix. The Giants needed that kind of bat. So they called Etheridge up near mid-season. He hit .226 in 40 games. Davenport hit .275 in 124. Etheridge was sent back to the minors last year. Now he is up again.

Davenport keeps his own counsel. Like the old pro he is, Davenport is a doer, not a talker. Take, for example, the incident in the second game of the Cactus League's current campaign. It was at Tucson. The Giants were leading 9-4 in the ninth. They had the game all but safely tucked away but no game is over until the final out, a corny cliche but nevertheless a true one.

Saves Rookie From Embarrassment

Rich Robertson, the promising rookie righthander out of Santa Clara University, was on the mound for the Giants. He had retired seven in a row since coming on in the seventh inning for his spring debut.

With one out in the ninth Robertson walked Lou Klimchock and balked him to second. It was the kind of thing that is embarrassing to a pitcher. More importantly, it was the kind of thing that could set in motion a wild inning.

Davenport took care of the situation for Robertson on the rookie's next pitch which Larry Brown lofted high and foul along the third base line of Hi Corbett Field, a picture ball park that is spring headquarters of the Cleveland Indians.

Tremendous Ovation From Crowd

Davenport raced to the waist-high fence along the line, crashed the barrier in a tumbling fall over it. The going-on-36 veteran landed on his head on the bleacher side of the fence. But he hung onto the ball.

The crowd of 3,607 Tucson fans gave Davenport a tremendous ovation. The final out came a moment later. Every one of Davenport's teammates walked over to congratulate him.

"What an inspiring lesson for the young players," said the new manager of the Giants. "Old pros know only one way to play it—hustle right down to the final out."

Giants Love That Bye-Bye Bunny Ball

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The San Francisco Giants and the California Angels agree the experimental "rabbit" baseball seems to carry further than standard models, but as Willie Mays puts it, "you've got to hit it first."

The Giants pounded the Angels, 13-1, in a Cactus League game yesterday that was played with the experimental ball — supposed to be 10 per cent more resilient than the ball in regular use.

The Giants had 15 hits, three of them by Bobby Bonds, three by Don Mason and two by Mays.

"When you hit it, it seems like an explosion," said Bonds, who hit two home runs of over 400 feet that would have been gone with any ball. "But I could not feel any difference."

"It jumps off the bat pretty good," said Mays.

The Angeles had only four hits and baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, an observer at the game, said with a smile, "They claimed we were only using it for one team."

Kuhn, who saw a game with the experimental ball Thursday in Lakeland, Fla., between the Detroit Tigers and New York Mets, said, "There's no question in anyone's mind that it is definitely livelier. It seems to have more effect on balls hit in the infield, especially line drives and hard grounders."

Kuhn said more experiments with the ball would be carried out in exhibition games during the season to see if it was an acceptable way of lessening the imbalance between pitchers and hitters.

"We're looking to see if it produces more hitting," he said, "and if it does, whether we want to produce it this way or another way. We could use it next year if it's desirable."

The ball has a larger core, made only of rubber, instead of the smaller cork and rubber combination in balls now in use.

Kuhn said the higher seams on the new ball might give the pitcher some advantage with his grip to offset the speed it carries off the bat.

Juan Marichal, the Giants' ace pitcher, took a look at the ball and said, "I don't mind if they hit it over the fence, but when they hit it back to the mound you could get killed, it moves so fast."

Kuhn said he didn't think hitting the pitcher was a serious risk, but did admit, "I haven't heard a hitter complain about the ball yet."

The Giants, 5-2 for the spring, nominated Bob Bolin for mound duty against the Angels today and Juan Marichal to oppose Chicago's Cubs tomorrow. If Marichal is still unsigned, Rich Robertson will start.

Williams Learning Sad Facts Of Life

By MARTIN LADER
UPI Sports Writer

Ted Williams may have to resort to chasing rabbits if he wants to bag his first victory as a manager.

Williams, quickly learning the sad facts of baseball with the weak-hitting Washington Senators, watched his club drop its eighth consecutive game of the exhibition season yesterday, a 3-1 loss to the expansion Montreal Expos.

While the Senators have scored only 16 runs in the eight games, an experimental "rabbit" ball has been bouncing around the spring circuit, spicing the attack of other teams that don't need the help as much. It was used in Phoenix, Ariz.,yesterday and the San Francisco Giants clubbed 15 hits for a 13-1 rout of the California Angels.

One team that has been getting along just fine with the old ball is Cleveland, and the Indians stretched their winning streak to five games with a 4-2 triumph over the Seattle Pilots. Luis Tiant, a 21-game winner last year, allowed Seattle one run and four hits in six innings.

The New York Mets, who had their shot at the "rabbit" ball Thursday, continued their recent surge of hitting by blasting the National League champion St. Louis Cardinals 16-6 behind 22 hits. Amos Otis, Ken Singleton and Al Weis homered for the Mets, who have 47 runs in their past four games.

TWINS WIN

In other camps: Frank Quilici homered in the eighth inning to give the Minnesota Twins a 1-0 triumph over the Atlanta Braves . . . A two-run double by Woody Woodward helped the Cincinnati Reds to a 5-2 victory over the Houston Astros . . . The Chicago White Sox rallied for five runs in the seventh inning and Bill Melton and Ron Hansen hit homers en route to a 9-3 decision over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Billy Conigliaro drove in three runs and Mike Andrews two as the Boston Red Sox beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 7-4 . . . Run-scoring singles by Bill Freehan and Dave Campbell gave Detroit a 4-2 success over Philadelphia . . . Frank Robinson raised his batting average to .571 with a double and a homer as Baltimore tripped the New York Yankees 5-2 in a night game . . . and San Diego defeated Oakland 8-4 with the aid of Al Ferrara's three-run homer.

Fighter Dies After Surgery

LONDON (AP) — Ulric Regis, 27-year-old Trinidad heavyweight boxer, died today after undergoing an operation for removal of a blood clot on the brain.

Regis was outpointed by Joe Bugner in an eight-round bout on Tuesday night. He was found unconscious in his hotel room Wednesday morning.

Although Regis was knocked down twice in the fight, he did not seem to be seriously hurt.

Redwood Netters Win

Redwood High School's tennis team opened its season in resounding fashion yesterday, winning 7-0 over Vallejo High at Vallejo. Giant winners were Steve McDonald, Bob Knight, Tad Isaccs, Andy Walker and Bruce Patton.

Howard Signs For $100,000

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Slugger Frank Howard ended his holdout with the Washington Senators today, signing for a reported $100,000.

The 6-foot-7, 260-pound outfielder had been holding out for $330,000 for a three-year contract and later brought his demands down to $125,000 for one year. He settled for a one-year pact.

The 32-year-old power hitter from Green Bay, Wis., came to the Senators in 1964 from the Los Angeles Dodgers after he had hinted of possible retirement.

NEW NUMBER

Howard appeared at the press conference, wearing his new number, "33." He was flanked by owner Bob Short and Manager Ted Williams, wearing Howard's old "No. 9."

The big hitter got approximately $50,000 last year and a $5,000 bonus for a home run spree in May during which he hit ten homers in 20 at bats over a six game span.

Best Prayer Is Best Player In Pensacola Golf Tourney

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — After seven years on the professional golf tour, Dick Crawford finally knows how it feels to lead a tournament.

Like Tommy Aaron, Crawford still doesn't know how it feels to win, but he's in a good position to find out going into today's third round of the $100,000 Monsanto Open with a one-stroke lead over Lee Trevino, Ken Still, Ray Floyd, unheralded Jim Colbert and rookie Grier Jones.

The 29-year-old, two-time NCAA champion from the University of Houston posted a 67 yesterday after a first-round 68 for a 36-hole total of 135 over the par 71 Pensacola Country Club course.

JUST PRAYED

"I had an idea I was close after the 15th hole, but I didn't know I was leading," Crawford said. "I just prayed I could keep playing."

The 1959 Southern Amateur champion from Bella Vista, Ark., won more than $25,000 on the tour last year but his best finish so far this year was a tie for 10th at Doral. He missed the cut at Orlando last week.

Trevino, the U.S. Open champion, shared the first-round lead at 67 with newcomer Larry Hinson, Australia's Bruce Crampton and Aaron, but appeared to have bogeyed himself out of contention for the $20,000 first prize with a 38 on the first nine. But Trevino birdied three of the last four holes to come home in 69 and tied at 136 with Canada's Al Balding, unknown Bill Garrett and Aaron. Crampton fired a 71 for 138.

Crawford said the turning point of his round could have been the third hole, where he scrambled for a par four with an 18-foot putt after hitting into the woods.

His golfing psychology?

"I don't go out for a definite score.

"I also recommend prayer."

Warriors Take Breather After Beating Pistons

The San Francisco Warriors are in a relatively long rest period, after beating the Detroit Pistons 114-110 last night before 4,004 fans at Oakland Coliseum Arena.

The Warriors won't be back in action again until Tuesday, when they meet Atlanta in the San Francisco Cow Palace, but fruits of their Friday night victory were sweet.

They moved one game above the .500 mark, making them look a little better for the berth they have cinched in the National Association playoff.

San Francisco moved substantially ahead of Detroit, then withstood one of those late rallies.

The Warriors had a 14-point lead midway in the fourth period when Detroit started a drive that put the game in a tie, 103-all.

Bobby Lewis hit two free throws for San Francisco, however, and Jeff Mullins hit two more at the five second mark to ice the victory.

Mullins was San Francisco's leading scorer with 32 points, but Detroit's Dave Bing outdistanced him with 35.

FISH AND GAME

By AL GIDDINGS

Welcome News: State Won't Hike Licenses

The state's hunters and fishermen will not have to pay any more than present dues for licenses, at least in the immediate future.

That little bit of welcomed news is part of the 1968 annual report issued by the State Department of Fish and Game. The report was given by department director Walter T. Shannon, who has since retired and been replaced by Ray Arnet.

Some of the highlights of the report:

SALMON AND STEELHEAD — Continued declines in fishery landings and spawning runs of Central Valley king salmon stocks prompted the department to recommend sport fishery restrictions to the Fish and Game Commission. The department plans also to recommend a reduction in length of the 1969 commercial troll season.

Although it has had some effect, we do not lay blame for these declines on those who take salmon for sport or profit, but rather on an ever-increasing number of problems which combine to reduce the survival of small salmon. These include unscreened irrigation diversions, forming of gravel silt and gravel removal, predation, pollution, vegetation encroachment on spawning riffles, and inadequate water flows, or fluctuations of temperatures occuring naturally or resulting from other causes.

The department does not suggest that fishery restrictions will provide a cure-all for the salmon dilemma. They are intended to provide insurance that enough salmon will reach the spawning beds so that our stocks will not decline further.

Construction of the Mad River Salmon and Steelhead Hatchery proceeded on schedule. This $2.2 million installation will be completed in 1969. Annual production will be 1,000,000 yearling and 5,000,000 fingerling salmon and steelhead for stocking in streams of the North Coast.

WATERFOWL — In January, 1968, as the 1967-68 waterfowl season closed, hunting success was the best of the season. Evidently the high duck population, good hunting weather, and more hunting days in the season helped to increase the duck kill 25 per cent over the previous season. Goose populations were up only slightly over the high levels of the previous year, but the 1,320,000 birds tallied was a new high for our aerial surveys. Public use on the state and federal hunting areas reached a new high when 102,796 hunters bagged 269,759 birds for an average of 2.6 birds per hunter.

This 1968-69 season, hunting has not been as good as the past season. The waterfowl migration has been later, and the warm mild weather has not been conducive to good hunting. However, the birds are now here for the winter in numbers comparable to last year.

DEER — The 1968 buck deer tag return was 29 per cent above the 1967 return. Checks on food locker plants are showing that approximately 40 per cent of the return tags are not being sent in. This indicates that the deer kill figures obtained from the hunter questionnaire which has consistently run twice the tag return figure appears to be a more accurate measure of actual hunter take.

CLAMS — A survey of clam beds used by sport fishermen in Tomales Bay revealed a well established resource for years to come.

LAW ENFORCEMENT — During the 12-month period ending No. 30, wardens made a total of 16,105 arrests for violations of fish and game laws and regulations. This is an increase of slightly more than two per cent over the number of arrests made during the previous 12-month period. Fines assessed by the courts totaled $479,563 during the past 12 months, compared to total fines of $464,254 assessed during the previous 12 months.

A plan to provide more effective and economical marine patrol coverage to offshore waters was partially implemented by the reassignment of patrol vessels. The Bluefin, a year-old 65-foot patrol vessel, was transferred to Morro Bay. Other vessels were shifted along the coast, and a twin-engine airplane is being purchased for offshore patrol work. The plan, when fully operational, will result in an annual saving of $70,000 in salaries and operational costs, as well as better law enforcement.

IN THE HUNTER Safety training program administered by the Wildlife Protection Branch, 38,000 youths received instruction on how to handle and use firearms safely. During the year, 650 sportsmen and other interested persons were certified as qualified instructors to train students in Hunter Safety classes. We now have approximately 3,000 certified volunteer instructors serving this program. The grant total of youngsters trained is 444,516.

Negro Athletes In World Of Extremes

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Negro athletes at predominantly white Southern colleges live in a world marked by extremes.

As performers they often win acclaim and recognition their white classmates never find. But when the cheering stops, they suffer problems their classmates never bear.

This is how three Negro basketball stars describe their lives on North Carolina campuses. The three, all from New York, are Mike Maloy of Davidson, Charles Davis of Wake Forest and Olympian Charlie Scott of the University of North Carolina.

"They don't accept me as a man," said Maloy, who with Scott is a second team All-American. "What they're saying is, 'Mike, you're an acceptable nigger,' and that's the last thing I want to be."

Social life can be one of the athletes' greatest problems. If a Negro attends school where there are few Negro coeds, he may have problems finding dates.

"I won't say you're restricted to dating your own race," said Davis, who as a sophomore led his team in scoring this year. "But down here it just works out better if you do."

Scott agreed. "Social life wasn't so good," said Scott, who is now married. "You have to realize that social life will be hampered."

The three said they came South for different reasons. Scott was graduated from Laurinburg Institute, a Negro private school in eastern North Carolina. Davis, on the other hand, pointed to the recruiting tactics of assistant basketball coach Billy Packer, and the influence of Wake Forest junior Norwood Todmann.

Maloy chose a Southern school because, "If I did well, more people would come down here to school."

Respect for their talents spares star Negro athletes from much prejudice and abuse, they said, at least on their own campuses.

In fact, Maloy complained that treatment is sometimes "too good." "My only complaint is that I'm treated too well here. Everybody wants to shake my hand and get my autograph and tell me how good I am, because I can play basketball."

Playing at a large university with an active Negro student organization can sometimes put a special strain on a Negro athlete, who must remain loyal to his school's team and to his race at the same time.

Scott is affiliated with the Black Movement at North Carolina and has attended meetings to voice the group's complaints to university officials.

But Maloy is one of only five Negroes in Davidson's 1,000-man student body. Although he was the first Negro to crack the campus fraternity system, he spends most of his free time with local Negroes in the town of Davidson.

"That's where I'd rather be," Maloy said, "trying to get my black brothers to seek their own identity."

But with the end of basketball season approaching, all three said they have enjoyed their experience and were happy in their schools.

"I have become kind of apprehensive of how people really feel," Scott said. "But now I have a better understanding of both sides of the racial issue."

One important result of the experience, they said, has been a deep sense of racial pride.

"I guess I'm up there near militant," said Maloy, who said he became interested in the Negro movement after reading the autobiography of Malcolm X. "I can't be a moderate like Martin Luther King was. It's hard for young people to wait."

Said Davis: "No matter what happens after college, I want to go into an area and teach black people, especially the young ones, what I have learned — that it's great to be black."

Santa Clara To Be Strong Again In '70

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Regardless of the outcome of today's regional basketball finale with UCLA, the Broncos of Santa Clara figure to be just as strong or stronger next season.

The Broncos carried a 27-1 won-lost record into today's National Collegiate Athletic Association's Far West clincher at Pauley Pavilion.

"They are a very physical team," said Gary Colson, Pepperdine coach earlier this year. "And they're very unselfish. If a man has a layup and a teammate is two inches closer to the basket, he'll throw him the ball.

MOVE PEOPLE

"They're so strong they just stand there and move people out of the way."

Next season the Broncs will do without 6-foot-6 senior Bud Ogden, a rugged 210-pounder.

Returning, however, are center Dennis Awtrey, a muscular 6-9 and 235 pounds; forward Ralph Ogden, Bud's brother who stands 6-5½, and guard Terry O'Brien, a 6-2½, 210-pounder. Also back will be starting guard Kevin Eagleson at 5-10.

The Santa Clara freshmen this season enjoyed a 22-1 season led by 6-9 Mike Stewart, a standout high school player in San Francisco, who averaged 23 points a game.

RETURNING BRUINS

But UCLA will be strong, too, despite the graduation of 7-1½ Lew Alcindor, 6-7 sharpshooter Lynn Shackelford and guard Ken Heitz.

Back next season will be forward Curtis Rowe and Sidney Wicks. Oregon Coach Steve Belko said earlier this season that Rowe, 6-6½, and Wicks, 6-8, were the best college corner men he'd ever seen.

Also returning for the mighty Bruins will be 6-9 backup center Steve Patterson, the team's fourth best rebounder and a 51.5 per cent shooter.

Up from the freshmen team are a pair of 6-1 guards—Andy Hill and Henry Bibby, both of whom averaged more than 20 points a game.

DRESSED TO KILL

Barbara Jo Rubin, first woman jockey ever to race in New York, arrived at Aqueduct yesterday dressed to kill — and she did. The 19-year-old Barbara scored with her first mount, Bravy Galaxy, a 13-1 shot that paid $28.20, $10.60 and $5.40. (UPI Telephoto)

Terra Linda Wins In Prep Baseball

San Rafael's problem was too many runs, Drake's too few, but Terra Linda got just enough yesterday afternoon and was the only one of the Marin County Athletic League high school trio to win a baseball game.

While Drake of San Anselmo was no-hit at Vallejo, losing 1-0 and wasting a brilliant one-hit job by three Pirate hurlers, San Rafael's Bulldogs were losing a free-scoring game 14-9 to Terra Nova of Pacifica at San Rafael, and the Trojans of Terra Linda were hanging one to beat host Berkeley High, 4-3.

All-Leaguer Mike Timmel pitched four innings for Terra Linda, which got only two hits, but one was a bases loaded two-run single by Dewey Forry, who had "a great day in centerfield and helped us at the plate," according to coach Bob Corley.

Rick Raznikov was a perfect three-for-three at bat for San Rafael, with two walks, two singles and a triple, while Larry Brazda had a single and triple to Rog Thomas' single and two triples. But four errors helped Terra Nova.

Drake played well in defeat, giving Vallejo's Apaches only an unearned second-inning score, to lose, despite a one-hit performance by Stan Lilienquist, Bob McClain and Rick LaFrenchi. In the second, an Apache reached base on an error, stole second, advanced (after a walk) on a fielder's choice, then pulled a double steal, first and third, which seemed dead at the plate, but the catcher dropped the ball and the run scored.

Nice Day For Marin Prep Track Squads

Yesterday was a sunny day for Marin County Athletic League track and field teams as three of the local high schools won handsomely. Tamalpais beat Montgomery of Santa Rosa at Montgomery 77-50, Redwood edged Piedmont 64-63 at Larkspur, and Terra Linda routed El Molino 73-54 at Terra Linda. Novato lost to visiting Analy of Sebastopol, 53-74.

Luther Brown was a double winner for Tam, taking the 120-yard high hurdles in 15.8 seconds and the 180-yard lows in 21.2 in addition to anchoring the winning mile relay team. Mark Miller won the 440 in 54.5 and the 880 in 2:10.1; Kit Healy ran a 10:07 two mile, and Verdean Herbold put the shot 48 feet 2 inches. The Tam froshsoph team lost 67-59 despite an 18-5 long jump and a tie for the pole vault lead by Gregg Biber. Pat Bowen did a 4:46.2 mile for Tam.

Redwood edged Piedmont in a tense, excellent meet. The Giants were led by Jud Piller's 150 foot toss in the discus, Bob Bartell's 45.1 in the shot, a 10.22 2-mile by Lee Hotchkin (a sophomore), Chris Sigur's 10.3 hundred, Todd Norriss' 2:04.2 in the half-mile and Mike Wertz' 12-foot pole vault. The Redwood B's won 93-33 behind hurdlers Dennis Kuwatani (9.5 for 70 yards) and Brett Wiggins (22.3 for 180).

Ron Elijah's 10:06.2 won the two mile for Novato, added to Ron Sparling's 47-11 in the discus, and Vince Brown's 24.7 220-yard dash. The Novato B's lost 92-35.

John Dohn won the 100 in 11 seconds flat and the 220 in 24.4 for Terra Linda, which took nine of sixteen first places. The B's won 86-38 and the Frosh won by 96-13.

Baltimore Reduces Magic Number To 3

By ASSOCIATED PRESS

Baltimore's magic number for clinching the National Basketball Association's Eastern Division championship is down to three.

The Bullets reduced it last night by nipping Cincinnati 130-128 in overtime. The loss ended the Royals' chances of making the playoffs.

Baltimore, with a three-game lead over Philadelphia, needs only to split its remaining six games to clinch, no matter what the 76ers do in their final four games.

The Bullets were down by 11 points with 10 minutes remaining against the Royals but wiped out the deficit on the shooting of Jack Marin and Earl Monroe. Cincinnati needed a three-point play by Tom Van Arsdale to force the overtime.

But Marin took charge in the extra session, scoring 10 of his 35 game points. Oscar Robertson led the Royals with 33.

A fourth-quarter burst gave Los Angeles a 111-103 win over Milwaukee. Three jump shots by Keith Erickson gave the Lakers a 91-86 lead which they never lost. Jerry West paced the winners with 23 points while Jon McGlocklin had 32 for the Bucks.

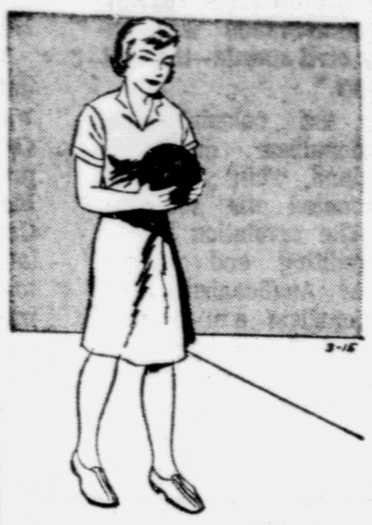
BOWLING TIPS

By MARION LADEWIG



There are bowlers who, especially in pressure situations, stand and look at the pins too long before they move into action. Sure, take in the situation and analyze it, but remember that your first thought is usually best. If you stand too long, as today's bowler is apparently doing, your muscles will "freeze" and you won't be relaxed later on.

2-7-10 . . . Joe Kenney, bowling for the Nave Lanes team in the California Trophy Mixed Traveling League, rapped out a 710 series at Castle Lanes in S. F. . . . In the Ladies 622 Classic at Greenbrae Lanes Sharon Wroten stole the show when she ran out games of 206, 226 (wow!) and 203 for a 675 three gamer . . . Kathy Robinson rolled a 215 line in the Mystery League at Nave Lanes, somewhat better than her 129 avg., and Clarence Johnson converted the 4-7-10 split . . . Marilyn Epidendio secretary of the Marin County Women's Bowling Association needed a 234 final line to hit a 600 in the Groggy Fours League at Greenbrae Lanes and that's just what she rolled . . . Karl Knutson, 8, rolled a 124 game in the Pee Wees at Country Club . . . Keith Ray led the Greenbrae juniors with a 222 line and 593 set.

DIDJA KNOW? — Total prize fund, excluding trophy monies, of the 21st annual Marin County Bowling Association tournament was $3,145. Broken down, $1,265 cash went in the team event (winning team Brandon Tire picked up $50); $800 went to doubles (winning tandem of Frank Bernardi and Dan Burke won $120); $811 cash went in singles competition (winner Elmer Tynes made $75); and $269 went in all-events rolling (champ Ray Haugen earned $50) . . . Hi-Lo's secretary, Faith Hicklin informs me Walter Karp picked up the 4-7-10 split and Pam Shannon converted the 5-7-10 (now THAT must have been quite a shot) . . . Nancy Wurz is really a steady bowler, rolling 497 series THREE weeks in a row in the Blue Chip League at Country Club Bowl . . . Bowlers in the Northern California Merchants League at Greenbrae Lanes are really buzzing over that series Tahoe Thunderbird rolled, games of 914, 908 and 914—2736, quite a scratch score for a handicap league . . . Joe Galbreath, 164 avg. rolled a 162-164-166, and that's called hitting your average, in the Friday Nite Leftovers League at Nave Lanes.

Church Sprang From A Protest Movement

By LOUIS CASSELS
UPI Religion Writer

One of America's oldest and historically most important religious bodies originated as a protest movement within the Church of England in the 16th Century.

Its adherents were called "Puritans" because they wanted to "purify" the established English church of Roman Catholic influences that had survived the Reformation.

The Puritans were true spiritual sons of John Calvin — earnest, austere, suspicious of the comforts and pleasures of this world, fired with a great sense of rectitude and a conviction of their own "election" as children of God.

By 1563—five years after Queen Elizabeth I came to the throne—the Puritans constituted a sufficiently strong faction within the established Church of England to challenge its policies openly.

They first voiced "scruples" on a relatively trivial matter — the kind of vestments work by the clergy. Soon they were protesting against a whole range of "Romanish" practices —kneeling at communion, the use of the sign of the cross in baptism, the observance of holy days.

In 1580 they went a significant step further and denounced the whole idea of a hierarchical church governed by bishops. Instead, they said, each congregation should manage its own affairs, and elect its own minister.

The Church of England, backed by Elizabeth's government, reacted by imposing heavy penalties on "nonconformists." More than 200 ministers were suspended for involvement with the Puritan movement, and about 70 were sent to prison.

These acts of repression merely stimulated the movement, and when King James I succeeded Elizabeth on the throne near the end of the 16th Century, Puritanism was a thiriving force in English religious life.

James I was a notoriously pigheaded man, even by the standards of English royalty. He crushed every hope of an accommodation that would have permitted the Puritans to remain within the Church of England and, with a public promise to "harry them out of the land," launched a ruthless persecution.

Many of the Puritans fled to Holland. Although Holland granted them religious freedom, it could not provide all of them with homes and jobs.

By 1620 the plight of the transplanted Puritans had become bad enough to make them willing to undertake a dangerous adventure. A little band of men and women from the Puritan congregation at Leyden, Holland, returned briefly to England, and on Sept. 6, 1620, sailed from the Port of Plymouth in a frail 180-ton ship named the Mayflower.

They were bound for Virginia, where they had received a grant of land. But their tiny ship was blown far off course by North Atlantic gales, and they arrived instead in Massachusetts. They disembarked at Plymouth Rock, and promptly began building a church.

This first batch of Puritan colonists — who are known in our history books as "the Pilgrims" (for no good reason except to make things more difficult for school children)—soon were followed by others. By 1640, more than twenty thousand Puritans had emigrated from England to the rocky and inhospitable wilderness which they named "New England."

They were stern, hardy people, full of religious zeal. The churches they established were strictly "congregational" in government—which is to say that all questions, including the choice of a minister, were settled democratically, with each member of the congregation having an equal vote. Because of this distinctive form of church government, they came to be known in America as "Congregationalists."

In their eagerness to purge all remants of "Papalism" from their churches, the Congregationalists adopted a severely simple form of worship, built around scripture readings and interminably long sermons. (Some of the famous colonial preachers—Cotton Mather, for one—considered a two-hour sermon a relatively brief homily.)

The austerity of the congregational liturgy was reflected in the rigorously plain architecture of the churches in which it was housed. Everyone who has seen a New England village in the autumn must be forever grateful that the Puritan conscience permitted the addition of steeples, which were considered acceptable adornment because they pointed upward toward God.

To squelch any possible scruple about vain display, however, the steeples also were given a functional use as bell-towers, for summoning the faithful to church.

Although they had come to America seeking religious freedom for themselves, the Congregationalists were not keen on granting it to others. They accorded "established" status to their own churches, and did not hesitate to use the power of civil government to achieve their religious ends.

Only Congregationalists in good standing were permitted to vote in civil elections in the Massachusetts Bay colony. Everyone was taxed for support of the church, and those who failed to attend a worship service were subject to punishment by the civil government. Sabbath observance was enforced by civil statute—the first "Blue Laws."

During the colonial era, Congregationalism dominated New England, while Anglicanism dominated the southern colonies. The revolution led to the discrediting and virtual collapse of Anglicanism, and Congregationalism emerged from the colonies struggle for independence as the most powerful religious body in America.

Congregationalists have placed their stamp on American life in many different ways. Their concept of democratic government is reflected in our basic political system.

Their harvest festival of Thanksgiving to God (which they adapted from Old Testament accounts of the Jewish Feast of Succoth) survives, in name at least, in the national holiday now dedicated to turkey dinners and football games.

Their concern for education is enshrined in such Congregationalist-founded institutions as Harvard, Yale, Dartmouth, Williams, Amherst, Oberlin, Mount Holyoke, Smith and Wellesley.

The first missionary ever sent out by an American church was Rev. Thomas Mayhew, a Congregationalist who started preaching to the Indians on Martha's Vineyard Island off Cape Cod in 1641. A few years later another Congregationalist missionary, Rev. John Eliot, translated the Bible into the language of the Algonquin Indians. It was the first Bible printed in the American colonies.

In 1957 the Congregational Christian churches merged with the Evangelical and Reformed Church, a Calvinist body formed during the colonial era by German and Dutch immigrants to Pennsylvania. The new denomination is called the United Church of Christ. With a membership of more than 2 million, it is the nation's seventh largest Protestant body.

PROBLEMS REMAIN

Catholics Eyeing National Council

U.P. INTERNATIONAL

The Roman Catholic Church is actively considering membership in the National Council of Churches.

The National Council as presently constituted is a coordinating body for 23 Protestant and Orthodox denominations with 40 million members.

Accession of the Catholic Church, with its 47 million members, would vastly enhance the stature of the ecumenical organization and give it a far more potent voice in public affairs.

PROBLEMS REMAIN

Serious problems remain to be worked out before the Catholic Church makes formal application for council membership.

The biggest of these problems stems from the council's present by-laws, which allocate voting power and budget assessments among the affiliated denominations according to their respective memberships.

Thus a denomination with four million members has four times as many voting delegates in the Council's General Assembly and General Board as one with only 1 million members. It also pays four times as large a share of the council's operating expenses.

This system worked satisfactorily so long as the Council's biggest affiliate was the 10-million member United Methodist Church.

But if the same proportional representation and assessment formula were applied, the Catholic Church would hold a clear majority of the votes in all council bodies, and also would pay more than half of its budget.

WRONG SOLUTION

Both Catholic and Protestant leaders feel that this would be an unacceptable situation.

One possible solution might be amendment of the council's by-laws to provide that no single religious body, regardless of size, could have more than one fourth of the total voting power or bear more than one fourth the total expense.

This limitation would not expose the Catholic Church to any serious risk of being outvoted on key issues by a solid Protestant bloc, because in actual practice, the Council always seeks an overwhelming consensus on major decisions. Lacking any power to force its decisions upon affiliates, it obviously is in no position to make important policies on the basis of closely-divided votes.

A joint working group, representing the Council and the U. S. Catholic hierarchy, has been formed to thresh out the organizational difficulties. It will begin work in New York April 8. Dr. John Coventry Smith, moderator of the United Presbyterian Church, will head the council representatives, and Archbishop John Carberry of St. Louis will head the Catholic representatives.

LONG NEGOTIATIONS

Since both sides prefer to make haste slowly on this significant ecumenical breakthrough, the negotiations may continue for two or three years.

Although no one is willing to predict exactly what form it will take, key people on both sides are confident the talks will lead ultimately to some kind of official organic relationship between the Catholic Church and the National Council of Churches.

Similar exploratory talks are underway, on the global level, between the Vatican and the World Council of Churches.

Catholic dioceses recently have affiliated with previously all-Protestant state councils of churches in New Mexico and Texas, and similar affiliations are under discussion in Minnesota, Louisiana, New York City, Kansas City and other places.

Thus the conciliar movement, which was one of the earliest manifestations of the ecumenical spirit, seems to be coming to the fore again as its most dynamic current expression.

India's Christian Faith Is Re-Expressed In Art

By WOODI ISHMAEL
AP Newsfeatures
(Fourth in a series of seven)

Contemporary Indian Christian artists have inherited a tradition that goes 5,000 years back into the history and culture of India.

Christianity is a small minority in India but well enough established so that its faith is now being re-expressed through the art of India.

The above drawing from the painting by the Christian artist Vaish uses many of the ancient classical forms. The figure of Christ is painted blue. In classic art when a figure is painted blue, a Hindu thinks at once of the god Krishna who vicariously swallowed the poison intended to destroy the world.

This painting of the blue Christ figure, falling under the cross, makes clear at once, to the Indian, the meaning of the atonement, the death of the Son of God for the sins of the world.

Marinite Will Be Speaker At Assembly

William H. Green, circuit minister of Jehovah's Witnesses for this area announced that there will be 16 congregations from the East Bay, Northern San Francisco, Marin County and Petaluma that will be attending the meet, including 100 from the San Rafael area.

Alvin L. Franck, district minister will deliver the address of welcome, speaking on "Make Wise Use of the Remaining Time."

They are filling in for Dr. Ralph J. Fortune, minister, who is convalescing from surgery at Marin General Hospital.

New Year Event

The Baha'i Community of Marin will observe Naw Ruz, the Baha'i New Year next Friday with services to be held in St. Raphael's Parish Hall in San Rafael.

HELEN HELP US!

By HELEN BOTTEL

Have You Ever Tried To Obtain The Address Of A Serviceman?

DEAR HELEN:

I was writing to a guy in the service and lost his address. Since he was going to be transferred soon, he probably was too busy to write a letter wondering why I didn't write, and now I'm miserable.

Is there any way you can find out a serviceman's location by writing to the Army or something? — LOST HIM

DEAR L.H.:

Getting a serviceman's address from official sources is as hard as getting an unlisted number from the telephone company.

If you know this fellow's home town (and it's small) you might locate him with a "please forward" letter addressed to the local post office. Or perhaps a mutual friend might help.

Otherwise, you'll just have to wait and hope for a letter. Meanwhile you might get another overseas pen pal through VIETNAM MAIL CALL, Box 3104-A, Columbus, Georgia. Send your letter to a serviceman inside an envelope addressed as above, and enclose five cents for mailing charges. — H.

DEAR HELEN:

What do you think about a father who would turn in his own son for smoking marijuana? My dad says this is the only thing to do, and he gives as an example the millionaire parents of a Pennsylvania teen-ager.

This girl received some pot from her boy friend, and her parents had her arrested. She got 18 months probation and a $300 fine which she has to work out herself.

Doesn't this action seem like Hitlerian days when children informed on relatives? I think parents could handle the matter less publicly, without humiliating the child and giving him a police record. Families should hang together, don't you think? And what do your readers think about this? — M.A.M.

DEAR M:

Families should hang together, right. But if parents believe a legal lesson is the only one which will take, then perhaps they should consult the authorities.

In next week's column I'll tell you about a better way—a visit to the drug ward at a state hospital. If all beginning "dopers" could talk to those who "have been" and are trying to make a comeback, we'd see a great deal less drug use among young people."—H.

DEAR HELEN:

I'm 12 years old and am afraid my parents don't love me. My friends tell me about the things they do wrong, and how they get spankings for them. But I have never had a spanking in my life.

The kids say I'm lucky to get away with stuff and not get spanked, but I feel — DEPRIVED

DEAR DEPRIVED:

Wise parents don't need to spank — they manage their discipline and training in more civilized ways.

If you are a basically good kid, stop worrying about your "lacks." (And you must be, or you wouldn't worry about them in the first place.) — H.

Sportswear Designed For Rugged Country

By LINDA DEUTSCH

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — In the rugged country of the Pacific Northwest, where women aren't afraid to climb a mountain or explore a rocky trail now and then, sportswear isn't a luxury—it's necessity.

Today, with a backdrop of pine trees and snowcapped mountains, Oregon's sportswear manufacturers begin showing off their line for next fall, a collection of clothes aimed at sports oriented women, and some men too.

The fashion symposium titled "A Breath of Fresh Air" brings together three fashion houses who have operated for dozens of years on the principal that a woman, whether sailing, camping, hiking or skiing down a slope, can be as glamorous as a gal in an evening gown.

Jantzen opened the fashion show with a parade of misses casuals stressing the indispensible staple of a casual wardrobe—pants.

With the advent of flared pants, a more feminine look, Jantzen shows 22 different styles so a lady can choose to have her pants almost skirtwide or have them conservatively tailored to hit the tops of her shoes.

The look with pants continues to be vests, the longer the better. The tunic gets a new twist for fall; it's shaped into a tiny sashed minidress that can be popped over slacks in chill weather, or worn by itself in the spring.

Following on the fashion runways were Pendleton Woolen Mills, parading dapper designs in men's sportswear to match the dashing town and country look in women's togs. The show revealed fashion's newest interpretation of the tweedy look in suits and coats.

White Stag, a company which made sails before it started making sailing clothes, revealed the latest look in an expanding fashion field—ski clothes. On the snowy slopes of Mt. Hood, White Stag will present warm, colorful, kicky ski clothes which should inspire even the nonathletic ladies to head for the hills.

Virginia Graham To 'Crusade'

EDITOR'S Note: Virginia Graham, actress, author and star of the television program "Girl Talk," is the first woman in the 50-year history of the American Cancer Society to serve as its National Crusade Chairman. This is the first of two dispatches by Miss Graham, distributed by United Press International in cooperation with the society.

By VIRGINIA GRAHAM

NEW YORK (UPI)—"I'm a better person for it."

That ancient Pollyanna line is just a joke. Whenever I hear someone use it seriously I wince. To me it's like saying—"Well, I've had the bubonic plague and my husband left me and my new mink coat was stolen but I'm a better person for it."

Maybe in retrospect it's possible to appreciate how a bad experience changes one for the good. But I defy anyone to tell me that there is anything good about a bad experience.

I KNOW because I had a bad experience. Cancer. I say had because I am cured of cancer— one of 1,500,000 Americans found free of the disease five years after treatment. Are we better people for it? Ha!

When I was told that I had cancer of the uterus I became a victim of paralysis, paralysis of fear. When I stopped being numb, I walked to a hospital window. Yes, I was going to jump.

OBVIOUSLY I didn't. It is hard to explain why. I had told myself that there was no hope, that the diagnosis of cancer was a death sentence. Why should I cost my family the suffering and all the money we had in the world when it wouldn't do any good?

So, I called my husband to say good-bye. Then everything I had been taught as a child, my darling Papa's belief that life is sacred, came back to me. By the time my frantic husband called the hospital and they sent a nurse to my room, the tide pushing me towards that window turned. I was able to resist the terrible impulse.

I settled down to wait for surgery, with fear as my roommate. Fear is the most horrible companion you can have. You know, you can touch fear; you can smell it—you can taste it. I know what fear can do. I firmly believe that many people have died from fear of cancer.

FORTUNATELY I encountered some of medicine's noblemen. Like my surgeon, Dr. Howard Taylor, now retired, who reminded me of Dr. Gillespie on the Dr. Kildare Show.

Came the day before the operation and I asked him if I might leave the hospital . . . to have my hair done at the beauty salon I had patronized for years. I explained that I wasn't a natural blonde. 'No one has seen me dark at the roots standing up, and if, God forbid, they see me laid out, it won't be with dark roots.'

He said to me, "any woman who feels that way about herself—I have great hopes she is going to be fine. Now, I'd like a nurse to go with you."

I UNDERWENT surgery with the knowledge that I was part of God, that God had created me in His image. He had allowed me to know what it was to love my parents, for having the experience of loving my husband and child and that now I must accept my destiny.

After surgery, I went through 35 deep X-ray treatments and never was sick for one hour, only a little timid about the experience. I had heard that you lose weight from the X-ray but although I lost over 12 pounds through fear in the week before the operation and a pound and a half during the operation, I didn't lose an ounce from the X-ray.

WEEKS LATER, my daughter, Lynn, who had been carefully shielded from the truth about my operation said, "Oh Mommy, you were so nice and thin . . . now you've gained all that weight back."

Just a final word about the technical side of my encounter with cancer. The very first time I went for X-ray treatment they put me on a table and marked my stomach with purple ink lines to show where to direct the rays. I told the radiologists, "You know, from the air I must look subdivided just like Levittown."

SO THERE I was at 36, cracking jokes an arm's length away from death. Was I a better person for it? Did I stop being afraid? Nonsense. A few years later my husband and I were in an airplane when its landing gear went kerplunk and we were prepared for a crash landing. I was every bit as afraid again. Surviving cancer didn't make me immune to fear or to anything else. But the experience explains why I am so proud to be the 1969 National Crusade chairman of the American Cancer Society.

Next: The Crusade and I.

Vassar Adopts New Dorm Policy

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y. (AP) — A new policy at Vassar College will allow men in women's dormitory rooms at any hour of day or night, except rooms in specified corridors for girls who object to the idea. The off-limits corridors will be decided by a majority-vote "local option."

Ginger Ryan, 19, a New York City sophomore and a member of the Student Senate, said Vassar's women were overwhelmingly in favor of lifting the restrictions on weekend male visits.

Miss Ryan said a few girls remained opposed. "They are only a small number and they have decided to move into areas where visiting hours will be restricted," she said.

Previously, male visitors were permitted only from noon to 7 p.m. weekdays and noon to 11 p.m. weekends.

At Brown University Providence, R.I., a special housing committee recommended that men and women be housed in the same dormitories on different floors during the next academic year.

The committee at the Ivy League school was composed of six students, two faculty members, two alumni, two trustees and two other members.

It said coeducational housing would provide an atmosphere in which "a fuller exchange of ideas, with a larger segment of the university community, could take place."

The reaction to Vassar's new rule was varied on the campus of the exclusive school—an allgirl institution until the arrival last month of 80 male exchange students.

"I wouldn't be intimidated walking out of my room in my night clothes," said Lita Lepie, 21, a junior from Brookline, Mass. "I have seen boys in their night clothes and we all have brothers and sisters and shouldn't be shocked."

The college president, Dr. Alan J. Simpson, could have overruled the new regulation, passed by the Student Senate. He chose not to and sent a letter to parents of Vassar girls explaining that students should have the right to govern themselves.

One parent disagreed, filed for and got a state court injunction against the relaxed rule. The injunction was lifted Friday.

Males who come to Vassar dorms without someone to meet them, however, will be left contemplating the outer doors—not walking upstairs with an introduction on the tip of their tongues.

As Simpson told the young ladies, the 108-year-old liberal arts college was not going into "the business of running an unregulated hotel for the benefit of guests ... I will say to you very frankly that we cannot afford the presumption that every young man with an eager desire to know a Vassar girl better can come up here with a bedroll and set himself up in your rooms."

SEW SIMPLE

Sewing With Wool Has Advantages

By EUNICE FARMER

DEAR EUNICE,

I am taking a tailoring course in our adult education program and our teacher tells us to follow your column for additional hints and instructions. She has also suggested that our spring project be made of wool, the kind that is not bonded. We live in a rather small town and I can't find a yard of wool that isn't bonded. Why would I learn more working with wool in the first place and also what difference could it make whether it is bonded or not?

MRS. R. B. T.

DEAR MRS. R. B. T.,

Hooray for your teacher, wish there were more like her and perhaps we could all get back to the wonderful wools that are so hard to find today because the market has been flooded with bonded fabrics.

You will certainly learn more about fine tailoring when working with wool than any other fabric. There are pressing techniques that are important and handled very different than when pressing other fabrics. You will learn the importance of "ease," shaping, and fitting in the finished look of your garment.

The quality of bonded woolens is much less desirable because the fiber content is not the same. The bonding process is used to hold this fiber together. Many women feel that because a fabric is bonded it doesn't need underlining, interfacing or whatever. This is not true if you want a custom look to your garment. I only recommend this type of fabric for "quickies," children's clothes, etc., but certainly not for a garment you are going to spend many hours of time on and one that you want to wear proudly for a long time to come.

DEAR EUNICE,

What is the best method for hemming those sheer, jersey knitted fabrics that slip and slide no matter how you try to treat them?

MRS. E. R.

DEAR MRS. E. R.:

Your question has been answered by a new product that we have tried with excellent results on fabrics such as you have mentioned. It is a net type product that adheres to brown paper and is almost invisible to the eye. You can apply it in three simple pressing steps and it actually fuses fabric to fabric.

If you use it for hemming these knits (you won't need to use hem tape, or any other type of finish) and you don't want the sharp crease at the lower edge of your garment, apply it about one-half inch above the finished hem and press to this point only.

It also works beautifully on neck and armhole facings that become so limp and curl up when you try to hem them. Hope this product works out as well for you as it has for us. Simple directions are printed every few inches on the brown paper for easy application. It is also washable and dry cleanable if properly applied.

DEAR EUNICE,

I made a beautiful Alaskine dinner dress this winter and wore it once. When I got it out several months later, my young daughter thought she would be doing me a big favor and she pressed it for me without saying a word. I could have cried when I saw it but didn't dare say anything since she was sweet enough to want to help me even though the dress actually didn't need to be pressed again.

Now there are iron marks on the entire dress as well as a sharp look at the hem and seams. Is my dress ruined beyond repair?

MRS. H. C.

DEAR MRS. H. C.;

I could cry for you since Alaskine (a mixture of silk and worsted) needs very little pressing even in the beginning construction. It should be pressed very lightly (always on the wrong side) with a steam iron and for a very expensive look, it should look almost as if it hadn't been pressed at all.

I have only one suggestion besides saying a few prayers! Take it to your favorite dry cleaners and hope they can repress it and bring it back closer to its original look. I would remove the hem first so that it could be pressed out since that would only take a few minutes to put in again. Don't expect miracles, but you may at least be able to wear it again.

President Predicts Decrease In Colleges

ST. LOUIS (UPI)—The Very Rev. Paul C. Reinert, president of St. Louis University, predicts enrollments of private colleges and universities will decline within the next 10 years from one-third to one-fifth of total college enrollment.

Father Reinert said private colleges are unable to compete financially with state institutions and some private schools may have to "revert from private to public status."

Father Reinert said the private institutions have "freedom to experiment and innovate" and he added that, if the private schools do not receive financial aid, "this nation will end up with a monolithic system of higher education, one that will be highly resistant to change."

St. Louis University has been forced to close its School of Dentistry and its Department of Geology because of lack of support. The Geology Department will be closed in June, and the Dental School will close after the 1970-71 academic year.

The University News said in a recent editorial: "Because of the financial difficulties involved in operating a private university, it is reasonable to assume that the best policy is one of specialization of study—offering a limited number of really good departments rather than a large number of mediocre ones."

July Nuptials Set By Duo

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Valente of Fairfax announce the engagement of their daughter, Lynn, to Robert Sartorio, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Mario Sartorio, also of Fairfax.

Lynn is the sister of Ken and Ernest Valente and the granddaughter of Mrs. Lea Capovilla of San Francisco and Carlo Baldassari of Fairfax. Her schools are Marin Catholic High School and Dominican College.

Corinne and James Sartorio are the future bridegroom's sister and brother, and he is the grandson of Mrs. Cora Schweiger of Belmont and Mrs. Margaret Sartorio of San Francisco. A graduate of Sir Francis Drake High School, Robert is employed by L. Sartorio Concrete Construction Company in San Francisco.

A July wedding in Carmel is planned by the couple.

Students Put 'S' Into Association

By PATRICIA McCORMACK

NEW YORK (UPI) — Put an "S" in Parent-Teacher Association — for Parent-Teachers Association — and you come up with P-TSA, pronounced "pizza."

More than half the 43,000 units of the P-TA nationally are inserting the "S" in an effort to narrow the generation gap.

The "S" stands for students.

Impractical, you say. How could parents and teachers talk about teen-age problems in the presence of teen-agers.

For nearly a quarter century people said that and at the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, other people said something like "nuts." Translation: "Let's give it a try."

PUTTING STUDENTS in the P-TA was experimental for some years. Within the year the movement turned into a campaign that's caught on like the common cold.

Some of the payoffs:

With the generations talking together about mutual problems, each discovers that the other side isn't all square.

Adults increase respect for the judgment of those under 20.

More parents attend parent-teacher meetings. The reason: Students make meetings more interesting.

"THE FEAR that teen-agers' presence would inhibit discussion has proved groundless," according to a P-TSA report in the P-TA magazine.

At the "pizza" meetings, youth and adults talk together about anything and everything— alcohol, discipline, drugs, dress, education, employment, sex and even United States foreign policy.

Serving as a sounding board for students' ideas, adults discover the diversity of youthful thoughts. They also discover some facts about other parents' attitudes about common problems in child raising.

AMONG MYTHS dispelled by such sessions —"But, Mom, everyone's doing it."

Credit for the P-TSA nickname "pizza" goes to the unit at Boca Ciega High School in St. Petersburg, Fla., organized last fall. A student invented the nickname. Their meetings are "pizza parties."

Most "pizza" units charge student members 50 cents a year dues. The adults pay $1. But at Boca Ciega students chose to pay the same as adults.

EQUAL DUES, they reasoned, would underscore their equal standing.

As part of its sales talk to units that haven't inserted an "S" in PTA, the National Congress says:

"To deprive youth of opportunities to give help as well as to get it is to stunt their growth, to keep them childish. To keep them childish is to erect barriers to meaningful communication."

'Revolution' Stirs College Of Marin

down several times during the session, claimed today, however, that the present "legal" government is still in office.

The noisy and often-heated debate attracted an unusually large crowd of students — numbering several hundred at times — as it moved first from the lawn outside the center into Conference Room A, then spilled out into the main hall of the center and finally moved back into the conference room.

Diamond called the session yesterday "a good exchange" and "really very positive" and said the students now are "all going in the same direction" towards getting fair representation on the student government for all segments on campus. "The problem is the mechanics," Diamond said.

Diamond insisted that there are provisions in the school's constitution for a referendum if students want to challenge the existing government. Yesterday, trying to make the same point, he repeatedly was told to "Shut up —."

The proposed court action was considered by two student officers who refused demands to resign — vice president Harry C. Gilbert and parliamentarian Mike Beyries. They claimed that the so-called revolution violated the by-laws of the College of Marin associated students, a legal corporation, therefore making the operation of the college illegal.

They dropped plans to seek an injunction closing the college, however, after conferring with Diamond yesterday afternoon. Diamond said today, "There is no need for anything like that."

The interim committee appointed by "the people" to set up "free elections" consisted of two representatives each from the TWLF, the Third World Liberation Front Alliance, the Inter-Club Council, the Executive Council, the Black Students Union and the athletic department. The panel planned to meet at noon Monday. The Executive Council scheduled a meeting to decide whether to name an elections committee at 8:30 a.m. Monday.

Diamond described the interim committee as "self-appointed . . . (and) not legally constituted."

LAW IN ACTION

From the State Bar Of California

U.S. Is Mighty Bill Collector

In our credit economy, lawmakers have made laws to help creditors collect bills and debtors to protect themselves.

But the United States is our common creditor. We owe tax money. When someone doesn't pay, Uncle Sam can collect his bill as no other creditor can.

Your tax bill arises from self-assessment on your tax returns, though the government may assess you itself. It may audit your books and deny some of your deductions, or add items you may have forgotten. Quite often, believe it or not, the government finds mistakes in your favor, and returns money to you.

Uncle Sam's collection weapon is the tax lien on your property. It exists from the time the tax is assessed. In some ways it is a "secret" lien; it need not be recorded, and few people know of it. Yet the lien is still on all property. The federal government can claim the lien or enforce it later.

The lien applies to everything — wages, life insurance, intangible interests, etc. Exemptions under state law such as homesteads do not limit the federal government.

If the government does not record the lien, the law protects mortgages, buyers, pledges, and judgment creditors. But other creditors must take their chances that an earlier tax lien does not give the U.S. greater rights.

In enforcing its liens, the government can seize and sell property, close up a business, or give notice and tie up property. If you buy out a business make sure that you will not have to pay the seller's delinquent taxes, federal or state.

A business or a taxpayer who goes broke must pay the taxes before he pays general creditors. Nor can taxes, unlike other debts, be discharged in a bankruptcy court.

(Note: California lawyers offer this column so you may know about our laws.)

Vehicles Held Smog Villain

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Most people think smog conditions are getting worse instead of better, and they regard auto exhaust as the primary villain, the Mervin Field California Poll reported today.

Asked about smog conditions during the past year, 50 per cent of the Californians surveyed statewide said it was worse, 34 per cent said it was the same, an only 6 per cent found improvement.

In Southern California 52 per cent felt things were worse, 33 per cent about the same and 7 per cent better.

The poll said 7 out of 10 persons put the blame on auto exhausts.

Hearing Is Set

A preliminary hearing for John Randolph Arbuckle, 18, of Tiburon, accused of burglarizing a Kentfield home Tuesday, has been set for March 24 in Marin Municipal Court.

Joint Human Rights, War On Poverty Talk Fizzles

A scheduled joint meeting between the Marin Human Rights Commission and the Marin County Economic Opportunity Council Thursday night turned out to be quite disjointed.

And the main purpose of the talks — coordination of manpower — got lost in discord.

Each group met separately at the county courthouse in San Rafael and never really got together, although they were in the same room.

EOC directors launched into a discussion of their own, wrestling with the problem of coordinating manpower training and development, while members of the Human Rights Commission waited patiently for the joint session to commence. It never really began.

After an hour of wrangling, EOC directors declared that because of their own "internal problems," a joint meeting was impossible.

The Human Rights Commission then opened its meeting, while most of the EOC directors drifted out of the room.

On a motion by Lawrence Mayer, the human rights commissioners declared that the best way to coordinate manpower training and development is to invite the 17 agencies involved to a workshop session with the county supervisors.

The Human Rights Commission also:

LEGAL AID — Passed a resolution indicating dissatisfaction with the termination of the neighborhood legal aid society after only six months of existence. Commissioner Mayer is to ask the Marin Bar Association to help obtain more funds for a neighborhood legal assistance foundation program.

HUD GRANT — Voted to support the Marin City Council's request for $25,000 matching funds for a planning grant from the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Synod Executive To Deliver Sermon

Rev. J. Davis Illingworth, executive of the United Presbyterian Synod of the Golden Gate, will be guest preacher at the 9:30 a.m. service tomorrow at the Novato Presbyterian Church.

After serving as general presbyter of the denomination's north coast area, Illingworth was elected to the highest administrative post in the new synod at its reorganization in January 1968. His headquarters are in San Francisco.

Annexation Idea Backed By Agency

The Marin Local Agency Formation Commission should continue its policy of requiring annexation of an unincorporated area to a city, when such annexation would provide otherwise unavailable urban services.

That concensus was reached Thursday night by the City-County Planning Council, which met at the Civic Center to discuss a policy statement on required annexations. The City of Novato last March asked for such a statement, pointing out that cities are vitally interested in developments just outside their limits.

Council members also agreed that future expansion areas for cities should be defined, and the cities and the county should have a common general plan such as the Novato and the Fairfax general plans. Once a common general plan is achieved, the cities should pre-zone to express city policy as stated in the general plan.

The policy statement on required annexations will be redrafted and presented for a decision at the next meeting of the council on May 1. The April meeting was cancelled because the first Thursday falls during Easter week.

The City-County Planning Council also:

NEW MEMBERS — Acknowledged the appointments of Peter A. Arrigoni Jr. and Louis H. Baar as representatives of the county spuervisors; Sally Garoutte to replace Richard Hiatt as a member from Mill Valley, and Robert Lagle as a member from Novato.

REFERRALS — Approved a policy statement on referrals made from other agencies, declaring that the council will deal only with areawide matters and will reject those which are purely of local concern.

TRANSPORTATION — Heard from Paul C. Zucker, planning director, that the first phase of the balanced transportation study will be completed in September this year, and the second phase in September 1970.

Car Battery Stolen From Shop's Lot

Spring Gardening Guide

After A Wet Winter Comes A Busy Spring

Marin Gardeners Eager To Make Up Lost Time

By DON KEOWN

The winter now coming to a close has been a "washout" from the standpoint of Marin County gardeners and the nursery trade.

Rains almost every weekend, and frequently on the week days as well, have kept even the county's most ardent gardeners indoors, although the winter season with its bareroot shrubs and trees, bulbs, perennials, etc., is usually a busy planting time in Marin.

But now, with spring coming on, nurserymen expect the gardening business to "go like crazy."

Prevented too long from indulging in their favorite hobby, the gardeners of Marin County will be out to make up for lost time. Planting and other chores that could not be done in the saturated soil will be crammed into the upcoming weekends when the earth will again be workable.

FURTHERMORE, there will be a considerable amount of replacement planting to be done this spring.

Losses of plantings were heavy during the wet winter. Gardeners who planted shrubs, trees or flowers improperly, or in poorly drained locations, have paid a stiff price in lost specimens. Now new ones, better planted this time, it is to be hoped, will have to go into the ground to replace them.

This is why the nursery trade is looking forward eagerly to the weeks ahead to offset the doldrums of the weeks now behind them.

IT IS A million-and-a-quarter-dollar business in Marin that we are talking about. To be exact, it is a $1,266,550 business. Or it was in 1968.

You get that figure by adding the $541,350 gross worth of nursery stock grown for wholesale in Marin County in 1968 to the $725,200 worth of business done by licensed retail plant outlets in the county last year.

Both figures, Marin County Agricultural Commissioner R. Allan Ballard notes, represent gains over 1967.

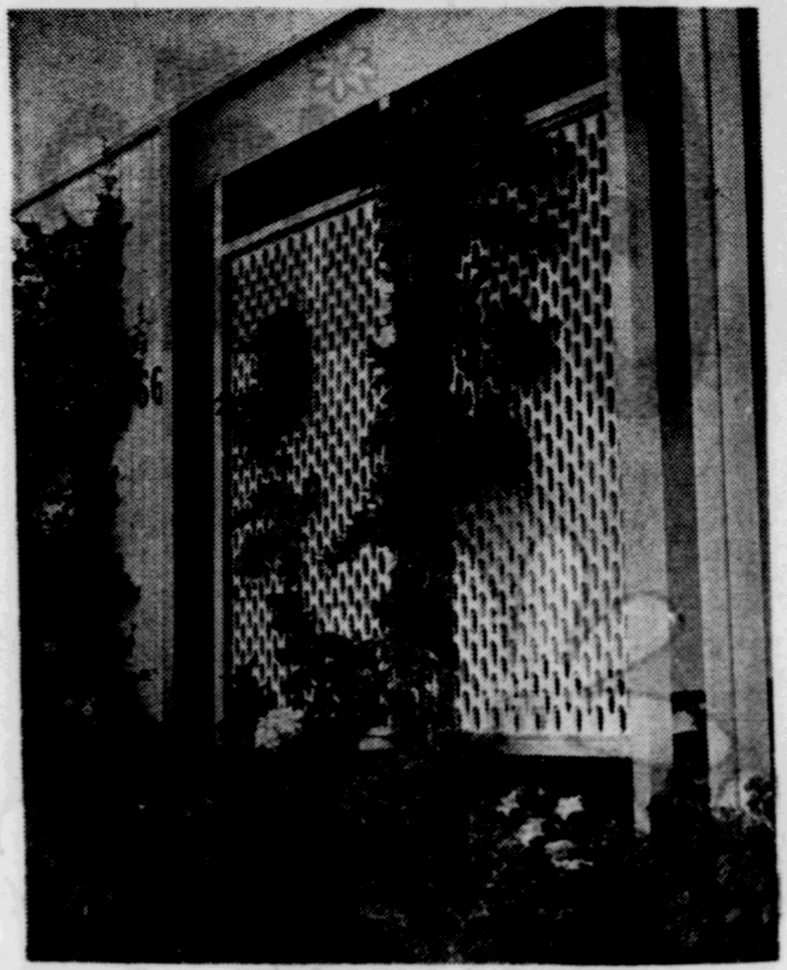
In 1967, the gross value of nursery stock grown in the county for wholesale purposes was $531,100. The retail sales total for licensed nurseries was $690,700.

LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT Sidney M. Lewin had two handsome eucalyptus trees on his Peacock Gap homesite that he wanted to retrain, and a view of the bay that he did not want to obstruct. His solution: the trees were boxed within wooden planters. And one of those planter boxes also serves as a seat from which the Lewins can enjoy their vista. For there added pleasure, there is a splashing fountain.

THE NURSERY stock valuation figure represents a continuation of a gain trend, since the 1966 figure was only $508,000. But the retail nursery sales total marks a reversal of a decline (the 1967 aggregate was $690,700), and a move back in the direction of $767,000 figure recorded in 1966. And in 1965 the figure was a whopping $852,000.

Actually, as Ballard points out, the figures do not indicate anything like the total economic impact that the nursery trade and gardening have in the county. The retail sales report applies only to the 90 some licensed outlets that handle outdoor-type plants. Not covered are florist shops, super markets, etc., that restrict their business to indoor decorative plants and cut flowers.

Tools and chemicals, for which Marinites expend tremendous sums, are not reflected in the figures.



WHILE THE LEWIN landscape was carefully planned one, it was also simple to execute. Just the right number of well chosen plantings provide the needed color. And screens and climbing plants insure the privacy of the occupants. (Photos by G. L. Koch)

THE WELL over $500,000 price tag fixed on nursery crops grown in the county for wholesaling covers such plants as orchids (the major nursery stock crop of the county in dollar value with the Niven Orchid Co. of Larkspur the principal grower), carnations, roses, lilies, heather, stock, living Christmas trees, etc.

There is about an equal valuation between greenhouse and field grown plantings, Ballard says.

While the extremely wet weather has played havoc with home garden and field plantings, it has had little effect upon plants in nurseries, since most of these were burlap-wrapped or growing in containers.

NURSERYMEN say there is no big developments in their trade this year in the way of plants or products. "Mostly it will be a year for the already proven and established things, rather than for new things," they say.

There has been some interest in the new roses and a few other new plant hybrids.

But for the most part, Marinites will be sticking with their old favorites.

BUILDING ACTIVITY, sagging badly in Marin County a year ago, is beginning to show some new life. And that means more landscaping activity as well. The general trend still seems to be away from Oriental toward a more Mediterranean landscaping scheme. This, in part, is dictated by the architectural styles in the county, and is also a reflection of the general emphasis upon Mediterranean furnishings for the interior of the home.

Whether it is the landscaping of a complete new garden, or the addition of a single new shrub to an already well established outdoor area, Marin gardeners indubitably are champing at the bit, eager to get started, ready to again get their hands in the dirt.

Like the nurserymen say, gardening is going to go like crazy in Marin County this spring, as "green thumbers" attempt to make up for all that lost time while the rains came — and came — and came.

Charm And Comfort In The Backyard

Weekends away from town — it's a wonderful tradition enjoyed by increasing numbers of families who own vacation homes, travel in trailers or campers, rough it in tents or head for the comforts of a rented cabin.

Yet many formerly ardent weekenders have become stay-at-homes.

Jammed highways, mob scenes at lake shore or beach, and campgrounds alive with transistorized radios have taken the "awayness" out of being away. Even supposedly inaccessible wilderness areas are becoming garbage dumps, say some outdoor enthusiasts.

SO WHAT DO the disenchanted do?

They set about making their own backyard a place of peace, repose and beauty. Vacation time then becomes any evening — and weekends are spent pleasurably relaxing in a neighborhood emptied of noxious noise.

Besides the traditional close-to-house deck or patio, these away-but-at-homers often build charming and comfortable retreats deep in the garden. Or they appear to be distant from the house, for the principles of Japanese landscaping are often employed to change perspective and create the illusion of distance.

THE RETREAT itself may be ever so simple — a rakish affair of Douglas fir posts and beams supporting a shade roof against summer sun and, for the floor a little deck of two-by-fours.

The garden retreat's roof may be solid and cedar shingled — but pitched to encourage air circulation. Or a lacy, trellis-style structure covered with spaced slats to filter sunshine could be the choice.

Always there will be benches built into the hideaway, again simple things of two-by-fours. These solve the furniture problem, keeping the nook livable at all times — no pre-planning necessary.

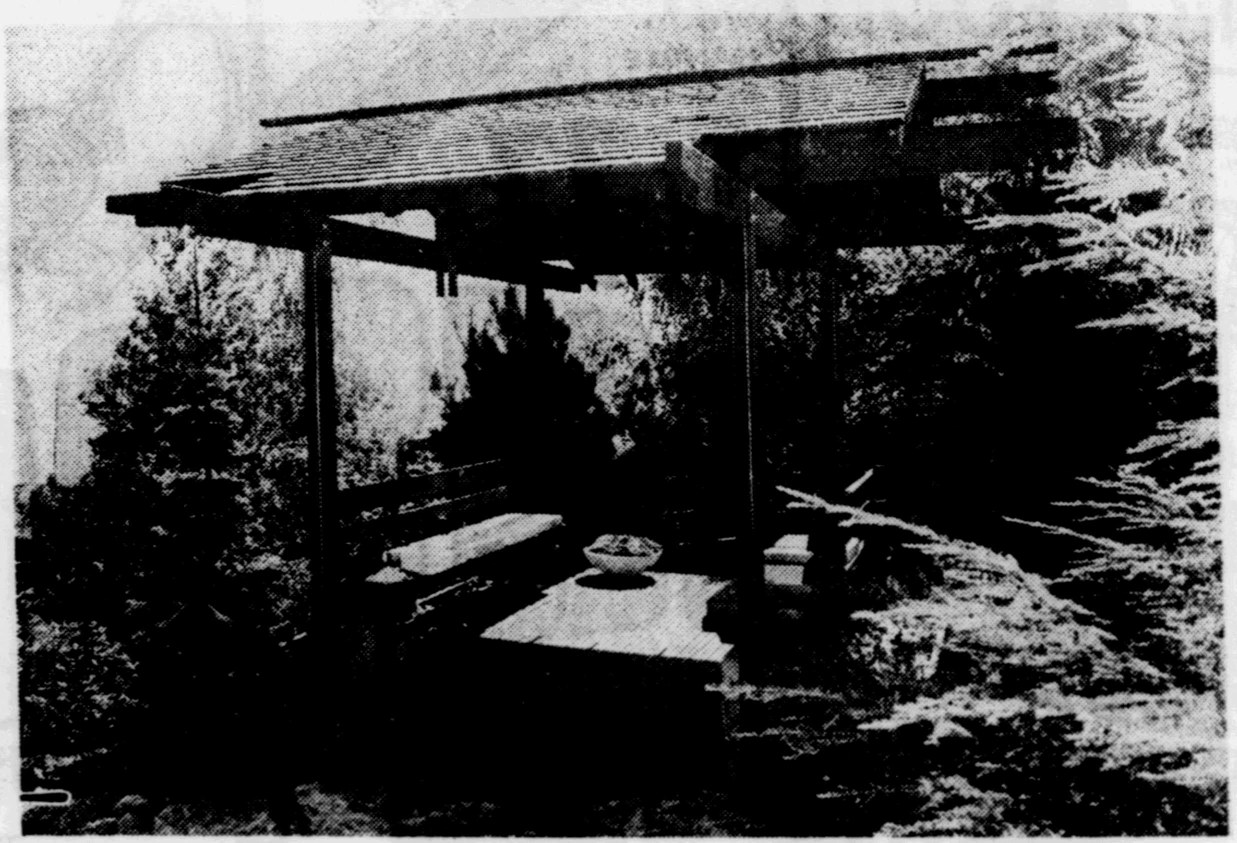
UPKEEP WILL be banned from the garden Shangri-la by the simple expedient of not painting any of the wood—posts, beams, rafters, roofing, deck boards or benches. All will be stained or allowed to weather. And the result will be highly attractive, appropriately garden-like.

Low-voltage lights can be placed among shrubs to give the area special charm at dusk and through the evening.

Plantings around the retreat will be thick, lush, with a good variety of conifers included in the plan — fat, deep green pines, spruces offering bluish tones, regal fir trees. Broadleaf evergreen shrubs will be a staple, too, planted so that branches interweave.

AND DECIDUOUS shrubs will form an outer circle with low evergreens, ferns, heaths and heathers running back into the shaded areas.

Paths leading to the hideaway will wind through the shrubbery and around rock so that walking to it offers the adventure of travel, a sense of seclusion and the promise of enchantment.



WHEN YOU NEED a refuge, but can't get to the beach or mountains, a backyard garden shelter can be the next best thing. Imaginative design and thick plantings all around make this backyard gazebo seemingly miles from home. The structure is easily built with Douglas fir or cedar posts and beams, two-by-four deck boards.

A MOWING strip made of building paper and crushed rock is one of the most economical installations you can make. The drawing is from the "Better Homes and Gardens New Garden Book," published by Meredith Press. The same book offers other ideas for more involved solutions to the same problem, including bricks embedded in sand, so that they also serve as an attractive border for flower beds. Other flat-sided stones can be put to similar use.

A Book Of Ideas To Save Time

The emphasis in the new edition of the "Better Homes and Gardens New Garden Book" is upon attractive landscapes, achieved with a minimum amount of work and maintenance.

The 400-page ring-bound book has 775 illustrations showing how to have an attractive home — everything from planning what trees, shrubs and flowers to plant, to the care of lawns, shrubs, ground covers, flowers, vines and everything else that grows in your yard.

Here are some tips that can eliminate most of the "stoop" labor and cut gardening time:

Mowing is a chore most homeowners look at with dread. Besides being time-consuming, it is a chore that seemingly always has to be done! Power mowers have helped shorten the time, but there are still dozens of stops and starts during the mowing of any yard.

ONE WAY OF shortening mowing time is to have rounded corners in your yard. This cuts down on the stops and starts necessary to mowing square corners. You also gain a bonus of more freedom in designing other landscaping features such as recreational facilities or interesting garden areas.

Hand-trimming grass around the edges of paving can be eliminated if you keep the paved area level with the grass.

Mowing strips can make mowing a breeze. These strips can be very simple or quite elaborate. For the simplest of mowing strips, dig a trench six inches deep and six inches wide next to flower bed or other structures where mowing closely is difficult.

LINE TRENCH with building paper or polyethylene to prevent grass from growing under the strip. Fill the trench with crushed rock until it's level with the grass; tramp firmly in place. Besides being easy, this is one of the most economical mowing strips you can make.

A brick mowing strip is more durable, but it costs considerably more and is far more difficult to install.

Bricks embedded in a concrete and mortar bed make an attractive — and permanent — mowing strip. Bricks on sand also makes a good mowing strip. Dig a trench six inches deep; spread two inches of gravel and then two inches of sand for the bed. Use a small screed board to level. Lay bricks on bed and fill cracks with sand. This is also attractive — versatile.

RELY ON power mowers as well as other power tools. This is definitely time-saving! If you can't afford to buy the power equipment you need, borrow or rent it.

A home with a neatly clipped lawn and a well-cared-for look is attractive to every passer-by and can add a surprising amount of value to your home when you sell it!

IT'S WELL WORTH the effort to give your garden the special little installations that attract and please birds. Hummingbird feeders, left, can be simple, colorful holders of sweet water or more elaborate replicas of blossoms. Baths, center, are irresistible to birds in summer. And even if there's a pet cat in the household, you can still provide birds with a safe place, right, by putting the birdhouse or feeder on top of a pole or metal pipe.

Birds Make A Garden A Happier Place

The whole mood of a garden changes when birds come in.

There's more to see and more to hear. It's a more bustling, noisier, happier place.

"Ortho Lawn and Garden Book" published by Chevron Chemical Co., San Francisco, points out that a tiny bit of attention to food, water, and housing for your neighborhood birds can bring you a concert of sound and motion in your garden.

DURING THE cold months, natural food becomes scarce, and your garden's resident birds are easy to please. If they like what you serve them, they often hang around the feeder for the spring and summer.

Almost anything goes — wild bird seed, peanut butter, bread crumbs, fruit, and sunflower seeds appeal to most visiting birds.

SUET ATTRACTS downy woodpeckers, jays, chickadees, white-breasted nuthatches, robins, and others.

For birds that hardly ever get off the ground — such as pheasants and doves — scatter bread crumbs, cracked corn, or chicken feed right on the ground.

And don't forget the value of

A Little Food, Water And Shelter Will Bring In The Birds

plants with berries such as pyracantha, flowering dogwood, Virginia creeper.

WHEN WARM weather comes, it's nest building time. Birds show less interest in your feeders — natural food is now abundant — but you can encourage some birds to settle down and raise a family in a house in your garden.

Chickadees, downy woodpeckers, robins, nuthatches, wrens, bluebirds, and song sparrows are among the most frequent bird house occupants.

Cool, clear water is what all birds want on a hot summer day. Birds appreciate anything that drips, squirts, sprays, runs or holds fresh water. They especially like it — and need it — in areas where much of their natural supply dries up.

BATHS SHOULD be no deeper than two inches and rough on the bottom so the birds won't slip. They should have fresh water often in hot weather. And baths should be located near a fence, tree, or building where the birds can fly to, sun, and preen after bathing.

Coexistence with cats is possible.

People with cats can have gardens with birds, but they must make certain modifications. Feeder, house or bath can't be near a bush or tree where cats may lurk.

Place feeders on top of poles or metal pipes; add a funnel-shaped tin or wooden baffle to the pole to keep cats from climbing up it.

THERE IS NO herb more useful than the common sage, pictured above. Easily grown, it provides a taste treat in flavoring stuffings, meats, vegetables, innumerable other dishes, and in making teas. Sage plants grow to about two feet tall and remain at their best for four or five years.

Home-Grown Herbs—The Gourmet's Delight

Freshness is written all over home-grown herbs.

Anyone who has crushed some thyme and breathed in its fragrance, or savored the aroma of new-picked parsley, knows what we mean. There is just no comparing the smells given off by dried thyme or by store-bought parsley with those that come right out of the garden and into the pan.

The amount of space required to grow herbs is minimal. Pots will do the job for you, as will a planter box or a small corner of a flower bed. And you need not worry about detracting from a planting of ornamentals. Most herbs are as nice to look at as they are to eat.

Parsley, for instance, has long been a favorite with us.

We took a tip from the California Association of Nurserymen once and used it as a border to a small bed of annuals. From there, we tested it along a brick path and in a circle around the base of a tree. In a garden setting, it looks as fresh as it tastes.

Some Plants That Like Shade Best

There's Wealth Of Material For Those Sunless Spots

Choosing plants for shade is no problem, according to the California Assn. of Nurserymen.

There is a wealth of material available, from the low to the tall, and all do well in the shade garden.

In addition to azaleas, camellias and rhododendrons, there are numerous varieties depending upon their foliage to create a pleasant aspect in the garden.

Low, sweeping, ranch-style windows require the use of compact, bushy plants. A little plant whose common and botanical name is the same — Sarcococca —fits the order to a "T." The foliage is neat, small and glossy-green, easily kept under two feet if necessary. Short spikes of fragrant white flowers appear in winter, followed by purple or red berries.

PERHAPS, YOU will need a low hedge in a shady area of the garden. Use Sarcococca easily shaped and trimmed to your needs. It makes an excellent informal grouping in the foreground, too!

For medium-height shrubs in shade, look to the possibilities of Japanese Andromeda, sometimes called the "Lily-of-the-Valley Shrub" because of the trusses of white flowers held above the fine, tapered glossy foliage.

There is a variegated form of this variety with creamy-white leaf margins. It is more compact, and considerably slower-growing than its parent.

If your water supply comes in the "soft" category, you can use the aristocrat of andromedas—Forrest's Andromeda. The new foliage is a brilliant scarlet. From a distance, it gives the impression of a red rhododendron in bloom. The foliage is a little bolder than the common variety; flowers are alike.

ANOTHER medium-sized shade plant is the Skimmia. Naturally rounded habit of growth, thick glossy foliage and a profusion of red berries on the female plants are the shining lights of the Skimmia. They should be used in groups of five or more plants, with one known male plant to supply pollen to form berries on the females.

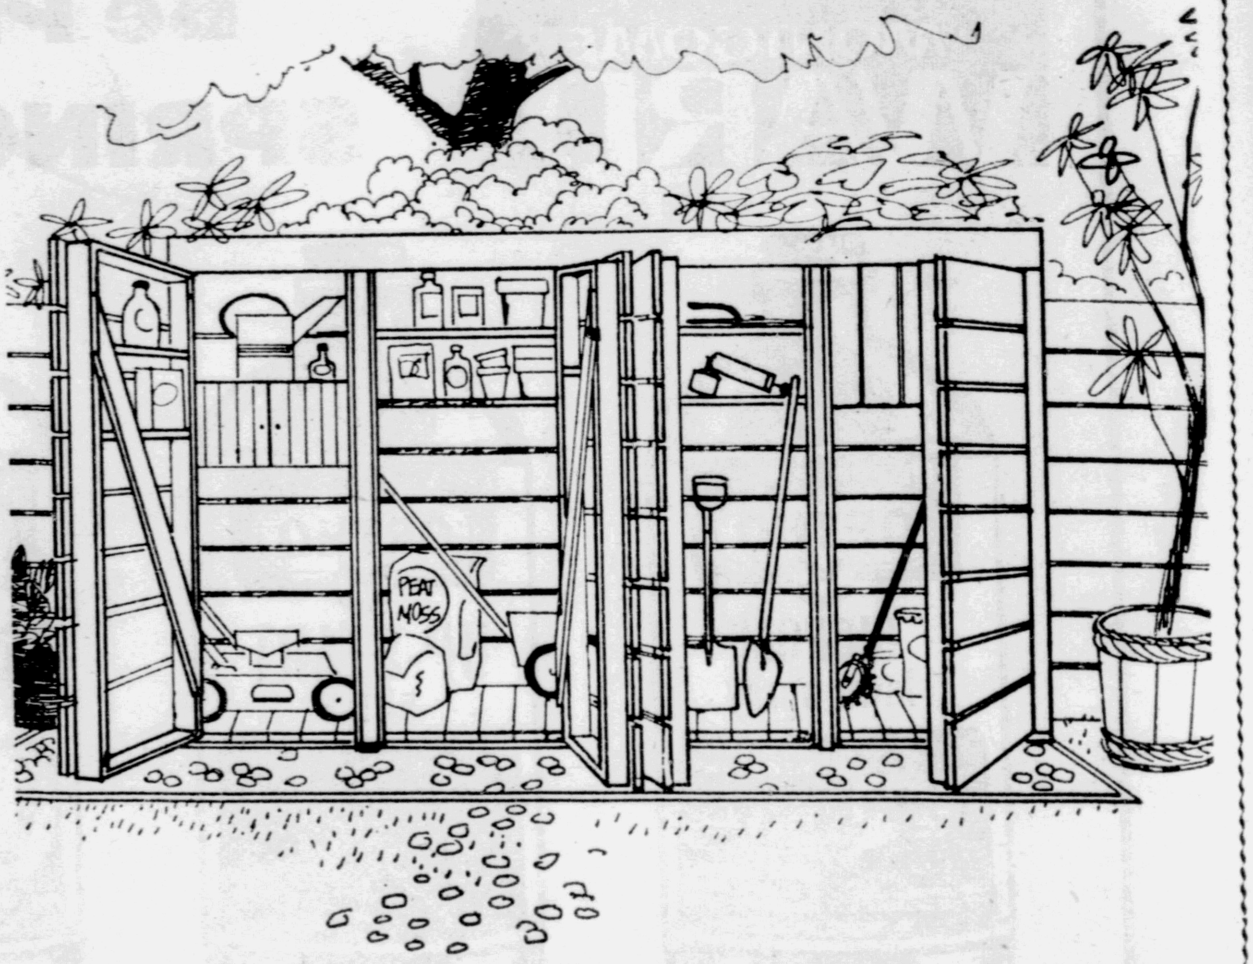
Your nurseryman carries a number of varieties of the aucuba, commonly called the "Gold Dust Plant." This reference is to the flecks of gold scattered throughout the leaf in many of the aucuba varieties. Others may be plain green, without variegation. Both green and variegated forms are capable of producing berries in showy clusters, but known male plants should be used in the grouping to provide pollen.

The aucubas may become as much as five or six feet tall. They are not rapid growers and maintain a dense, compact habit in all stages. Wash the foliage occasionally with a sharp stream from your hose—makes it sparkle!

BE SURE TO become acquainted with the Laurustinus, whose panicles of pinkish-white flowers can take the dreariness out of a cold winter day. The growth is generally upright, with very dark foliage. The Sandankwa variety has crinkled, rounded leaves, and a bushier habit of growth.

Laurustinus berries are purplish; Sandankwa's berries are red, carried just beneath the outer leaves.

THE CLUTTER CLEARER



APTLY NAMED, this Stow-In-All Storage Fence gobbles the clutter of garden tools and rearranges it all neatly and accessibly. The three-foot module plan lets you build to any length. They Call It Nightscaping

Soft Lights Lend Glow To Garden After Dark

A new word has been introduced to the American home scene: nightscaping.

It has been defined as "an illuminative, mood-filled complement to landscaping."

"Nightscaping and landscaping have the same aesthetic and functional objectives," says William J. Locklin, a Redlands electrical engineer who has turned a unique garden lighting concept into a suddenly flourishing business. "One simply takes up where, with darkness, the other leaves off."

Landscaping, of course, embodies an arrangement of lawns, flowers, shrubs, trees and non-growing objects that imparts daytime charm and serenity to an environment. Locklin construes nightscaping, in turn, as an effective utilization of soft lights, shadows and silhouettes to prolong the visual enjoyment of that environment into nighttime.

HIS INSTRUMENTS for creating after-dark beauty are a broad range of cylindrical or mushroom-shaped light fixtures he has designed and put into production as president of Loran Inc. Powered by just 12 volts as against the normal 120, covered or hooded, low key and glareless, they give wide latitude in the dramatizing of exterior features or the projecting of a mood.

They may be placed on the ground, attached to a wall, hung from a tree, concealed in a plant or submerged in water. They may accent a door, a window, an eave, a step, a walk, a shrub, a tree, even a distant view. They lend themselves to interesting experiments in such techniques of illumination as uplighting downlighting, highlighting, crosslighting, backlighting, vista lighting, skeleton lighting and underwater lighting.

Different from the typical floodlight, their function isn't solely to illuminate. They are designed to develop flattering shadow patterns and silhouettes, giving an illusion of increased width and depth to the exterior of a home, apartment or commercial building.

LOCKLIN CONCEIVED each of the more than 20 fixtures his firm currently manufacturers to fill a particular lighting need or desire. But rare is the occasion, he says, when pertinent use can be made of all.

"It depends first on the effect being sought," he explains. "Three to four fixtures may meet the esthetic requirements of one piece of property. Another may demand five to six and so on.

"It depends, too, on whether any safety factors are involved. Someone may want to light a step or a walk to avert falls by guests. Someone else might want to light various parts of the house's exterior to discourage prowlers."

LOCKLIN THUS raises the point that nightscaping has utilitarian purpose as well as one of nocturnal beautification. And the safety element doesn't pertain purely to unwanted mishaps or visitors. A 12-volt system opens new horizons in the safe handling of electrical fixtures.

Its low-key beams offer ample illumination. Yet, unlike a 120-volt system, it presents no danger of electrocution, or even electrical shock.

A child, for example, can remove a fixture's bulb and poke his finger inside without risk. If a 12-volt cable happens to be cut, there may be a spark but no shock. Connections even can be made under water without a tingle.

The 12-volt wiring is also remarkably simple to install, whether by a do-it-yourself home owner or an electrician. It can be buried a few inches in the ground, strung along fences or run up a tree without bothering with a conduit or protective cable, as mandatory with 120 wiring. Or it can be left above ground until a firm decision on the placement of fixtures is made.

A TRANSFORMER must be obtained to reduce the 120-volt current of the American household. If it is of modern make, however, the installer just needs to plug it into any handy outlet.

He then is ready to experiment with diverse approaches to lighting and the creation of distinct shadows, silhouettes and moods. He might try a light over a shrub, under it or behind it. He might try one under a tree or in its branches. He might try one or more on a fence or hedge to form a night-time curtain between his property and a neighbor's.

He might try one in a pool or alongside it, reflecting on the water.

His opportunities to attain the spectacular are manifold. Locklin asks only that he adhere to three basic percepts:

FIRST, TO BE certain of the effect, that he do all his experimenting at night; second, that he realize better results will be achieved with, say, six small lights than two or three more powerful lights; third, that he always keep in mind this nightscaping motto:

"The effect is to be seen, not the source."

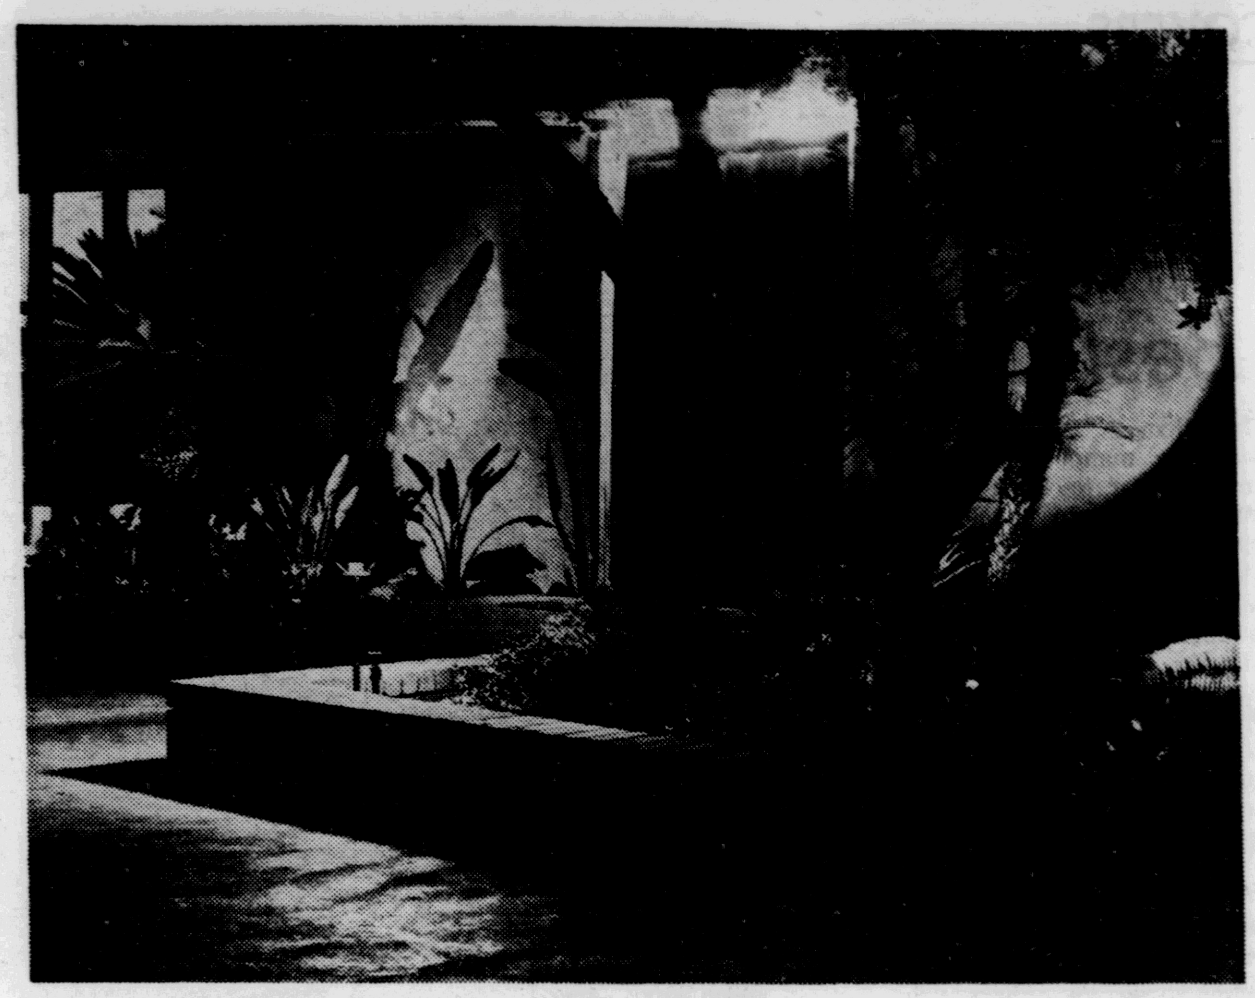
For an eye-arresting combination of plants on your terrace, try arranging clay-potted hydrangeas against the towering exotic foliage of a monstera philodendron.



LOW-VOLTAGE FIXTURES are used to illuminate this doorway and steps as a safety precaution. But the soft lighting also serves to create dramatic shadow patterns among the plants to add to the night-time beauty of the home.

THE GAZANIAS are a colorful choice as the groundcover for a warm, dry spot in the garden. They are available in separate colors, and their daisy-like blooms appear throughout the warmer months. Pictured above is one of the more spreading varieties, suited to filling in an otherwise barren expanse with gray foliage and yellow blooms. (Photo courtesy of California Association of Nurserymen)

Groundcover can be the answer to many garden problems, but far too many home gardeners leap to conclusions when it comes to selecting their particular groundcover.

So says the California Association of Nurserymen, which points out that some groundcovers take heavy foot traffic and some take none at all. Some covers need much moisture, while others are quite drought resistant — and resent frequent watering. Some covers are sun-lovers while others prefer shade.

To select the cover which will meet all, or most of a gardener's special needs, the nurseryman should be consulted.

A MAJORITY of home gardeners want from their groundcovers a showy carnival of color, and with such performers as gazanias, periwinkle, ivy geranium, ice plant, lantana and Saint John's wort, this is possible.

Gazanias like sun and are drought resistant. Their daisy-like blooms come in the familiar yellow, orange and white — but recent introductions have orangish-blooms with darker markings that create a stunning sight.

A trailing variety is most versatile — filling-in an area while providing beauty with its grey foliage and yellow blossoms.

Periwinkle — both Vinca major and Vinca minor — are trailers. They have attractive blue flowers and thrive in all kinds of soil.

VINCA MAJOR is used widely on slopes and other problem areas, while Vinca minor is best in large areas, which because of location must be kept neat and attractive.

Ivy geranium and ice plant are common to Marin gardeners, but there is nothing commonplace about the spectacular beauty their blooms provide. Nurserymen have a good selection of separate colors of each available, and right now is an ideal time to plant them.

Lantana is available in bedding plant sizes, and nurserymen have a wide color choice to choose from. The continuous summer color sparkles throughout the neighborhood.

St. John's wort (Hypericum) is a durable plant. Its soft green foliage is appealing to the eye and the yellow blossoms — close-up or from a distance — are traffic stoppers.

THERE ARE other groundcovers such as yellow-blooming potentilla, verbena (available in separate colors), and ajuga that provide refreshing garden color; and are worthy of consideration.

It would be a disservice not to mention ornamental strawberry, or the many ivy plants that are popular choices as groundcovers. The strawberry is rapid-growing, and hugs the ground. Its attractive dark green foliage and its growth habit create a desirable texture to the landscape.

Algerian ivy is widely-planted in California and more and more gardeners are becoming aware of English ivy, Hahn's ivy, needlepoint ivy and other smaller-leafed ones. These are used extensively by landscapers to achieve special low-growing effects in the garden.

THE STRIP adjacent to a driveway is a prime example of the kind of problem area where a wisely-chosen groundcover can do a job for the home owner or his landscaper.

Marin's Fair Is Showcase Of Gardening

Ross Becomes A Mecca Of Landscaping Ideas

Weary of winter with its dripping skies, chilly winds and soggy ground, Marin gardeners are looking forward to spring with a special anticipation this year.

And the very rains that have kept him indoors in recent months will provide the Marinite with what promises to be one of the most verdant spring seasons in memory.

Greenery will be lush and blossoms will be heavy.

Those conditions present the gardener with a marvelous opportunity to achieve new heights in his landscaping this year.

BUT THIS ALSO requires planning and creative ideas. For help in that department, the gardener can go back to the 1968 Marin Art and Garden Fair at the Marin Art and Garden Center in Ross, which, with its "Bridges to Kyoto" Oriental theme was a treasure trove of tasteful ideas in exterior design.

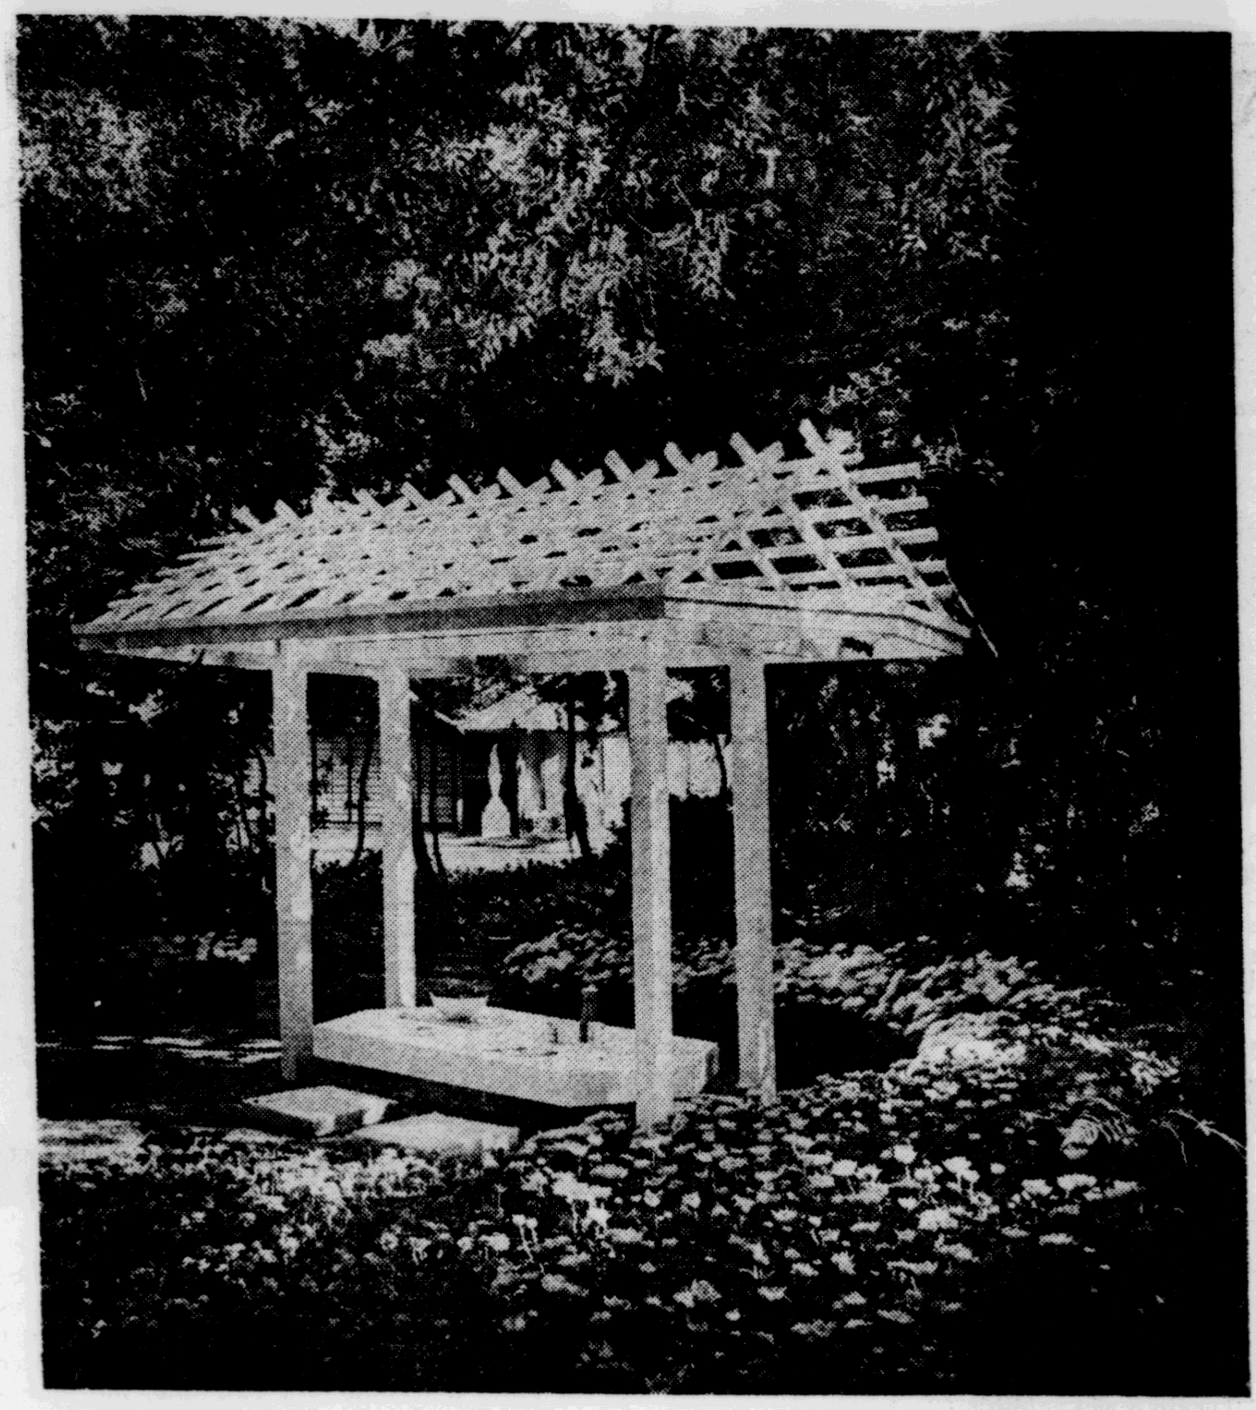
There will be another Marin Art and Garden Fair in Ross this summer, July 2 through July 6, with the theme this time "In Old New Orleans."

Designer George Murata, responsible for last year's success, is in charge again.

BUT BACK TO 1968 and "Bridges to Kyoto": To help remind Marinites of some of the garden sets and ideas that won their eyes and their acclaim last summer, this special gardening issue of the Marin Magazine presents a portfolio of Ken Molino photographs of those displays on this page and the following two pages.

Study them, and then get to work. For spring is upon us. And you can rejoice with the poet Swinburne who said:

"For winter's rains and ruins
are over
And all the season of snows
and sins . . .
And in the greer underwood
and cover
Blossom by blossom spring
begins."



THIS GARDEN STRUCTURE from the "May to September" category in last year's Marin Art and Garden Fair, is not, according to its creators, West End Nursery, particularly functional. However, what it lacks as a wind screen or sun shade, it makes up for in decorative value and in simplicity and compactness, should the gardener wish to remove it for storing or re-painting. The top, simply bolted together, can be folded up and stored or taken apart to repaint. The whole structure, minus the table, contains $35 to $40 worth of material. Dennis Untermann, its designer, points out that the small table beneath the structure is the same general shape and contains about $15 worth of material. Any flat garden area gains interest, he points out, by using an artificially raised planting section — such as shown here. The bloom area, all fitted in behind a header board, is raised above the patio, thus giving the patio a sunken feeling. The mass of blooms shown are chrysanthemums and sparky marigolds but should the home gardener not want to go to that expense, a mass bloom effect can be achieved by using petunias, impatiens or small begonias. To be most effective, this structure should be set among lots of trees and greenery and be brightly painted, Untermann believes. (See pages M18 and M19 for additional photos.)

Marin families enjoy the highest average incomes of any county in all 13 Western States.

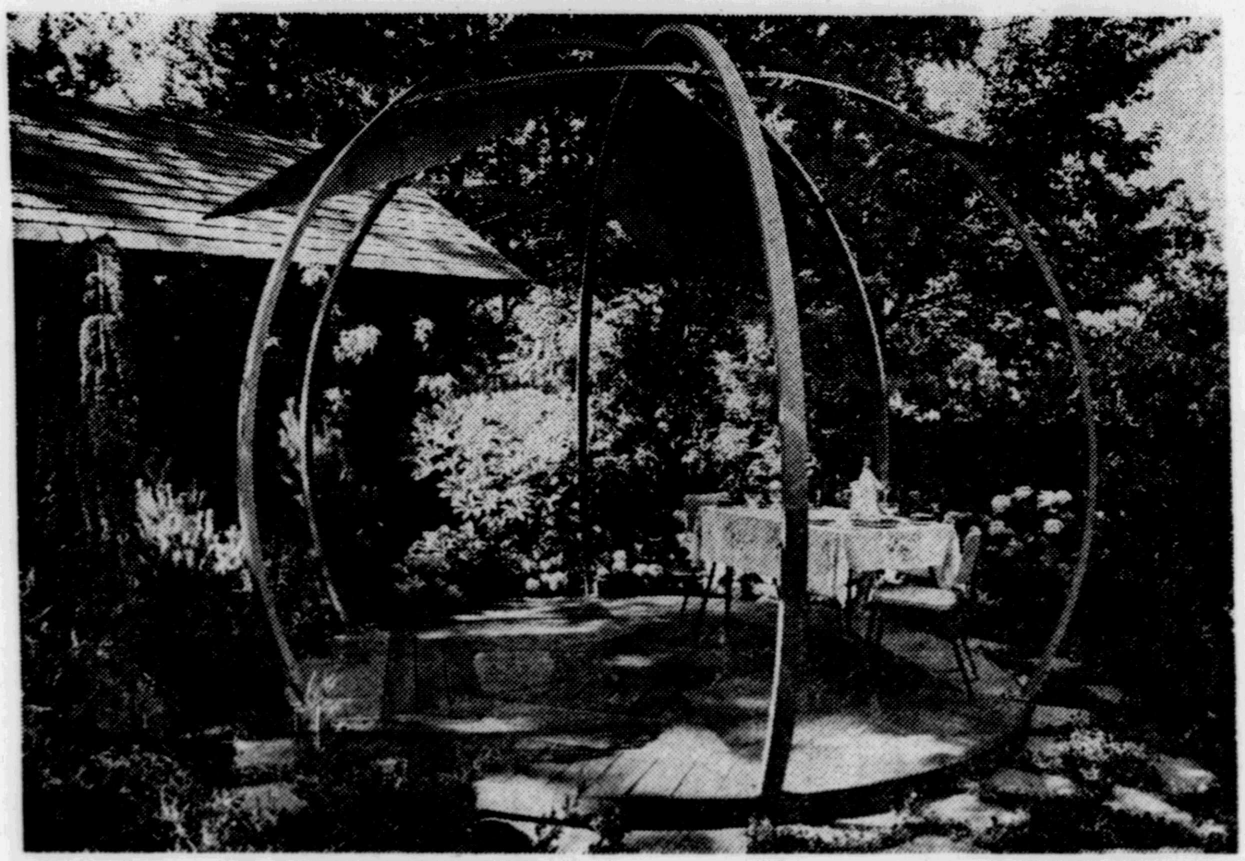
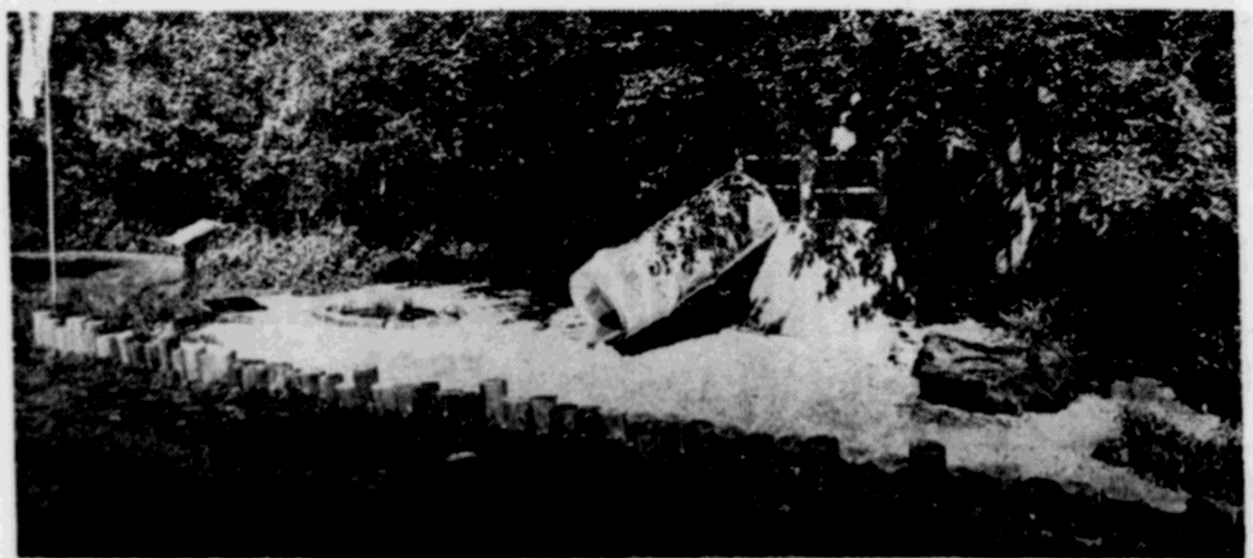
Some Ideas From M

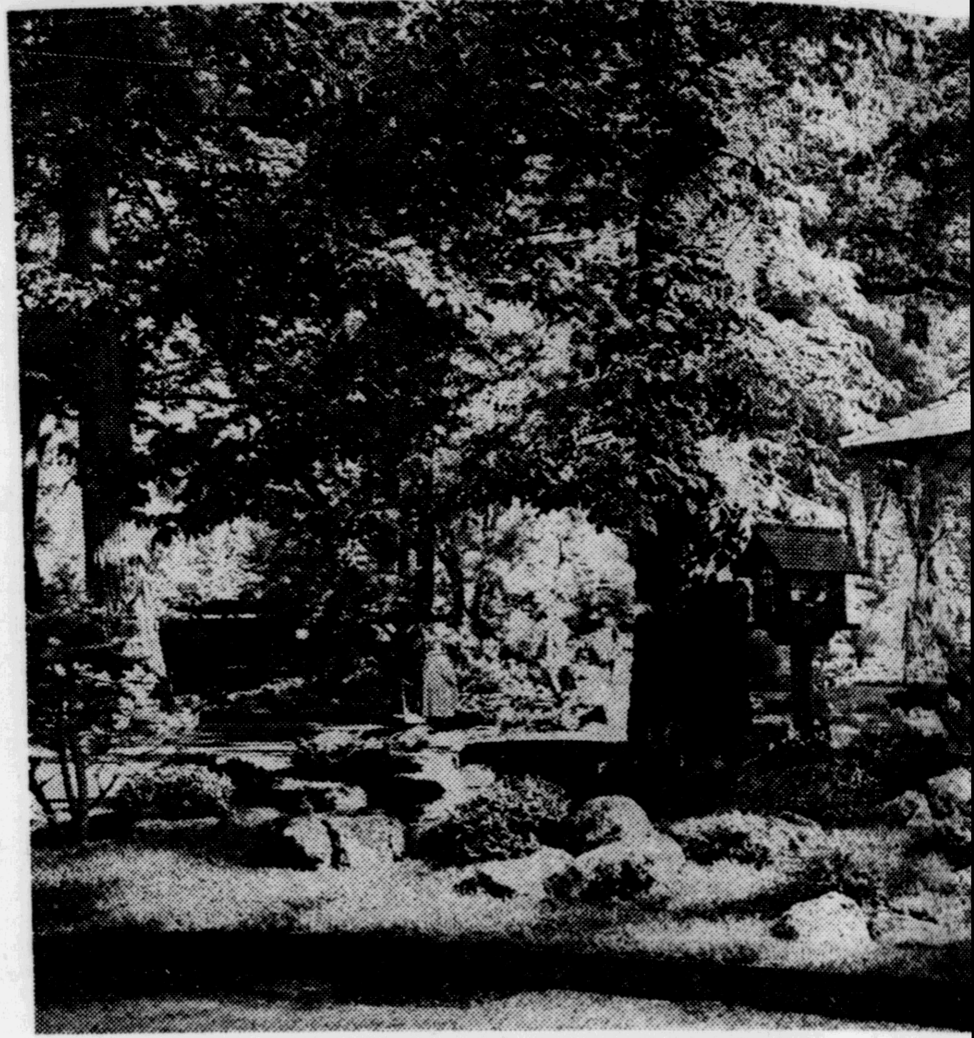
PHILLIP GRAY, designer for Cottage Landscape Construction of Vallejo, sees this treatment as a solution to the split-level lot problem so prevalent in Marin County. The steps pictured could lead to the upper level. The sunken area is made patio-like by the use of eight-by-eight-inch wooden blocks. While turf was used for the display in Marin Art and Garden Fair garden, the designer recommends diachondra. The area is enclosed by a low fence which is also used for seating. The surrounding area can be a riot of blooms with the only planting on the terrace, except for groundcover, a small evergreen.



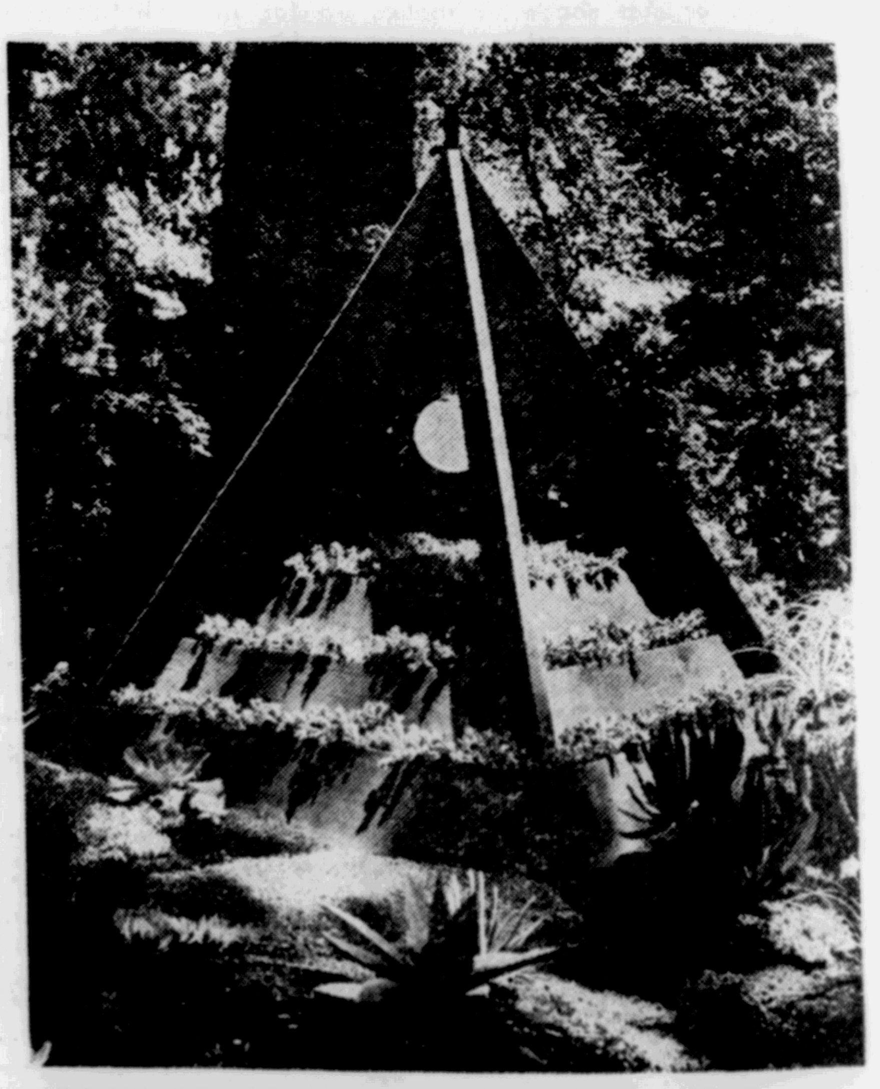
SOMETHING RATHER elegant in the way of garden sculpture, doubling as a dining area, is shown here by the Santa Venetia Nursery. The structure, of steel and redwood, was designed originally to take advantage of the view in a Peacock Gap home breakfast area. That is why steel was used to give shape without confinement. The redwood panels on top are moveable and can be slotted-in anywhere, thus serving as parasol or wind screen. Color was introduced by the slate paving around the perimeter. The surrounding garden was designed for the person who wants to utilize the maximum blooming period. There are succulents for sun and hydrangeas for shade, roses and red petunias, as well as a great variety of shrubs.



A CHILDREN'S playtime garden, designed by Peter and Mary Mock for Pixie Parents, was dominated by this imaginative slide, carrying out the Japanese theme by using a fish for the play tunnel. However, it could be adapted many ways and even changed from time to time to provide a slide for preschoolers. Children are "play-in-water-lovers," so the yard contains a plastic pool sunk in the ground. In it are enough shells, grasses and floating things to gladden the hearts of small fry. The piece of driftwood is not only decorative but provides sitting space and climbing action. The unusual border is made by sawing off logs to desired heights.

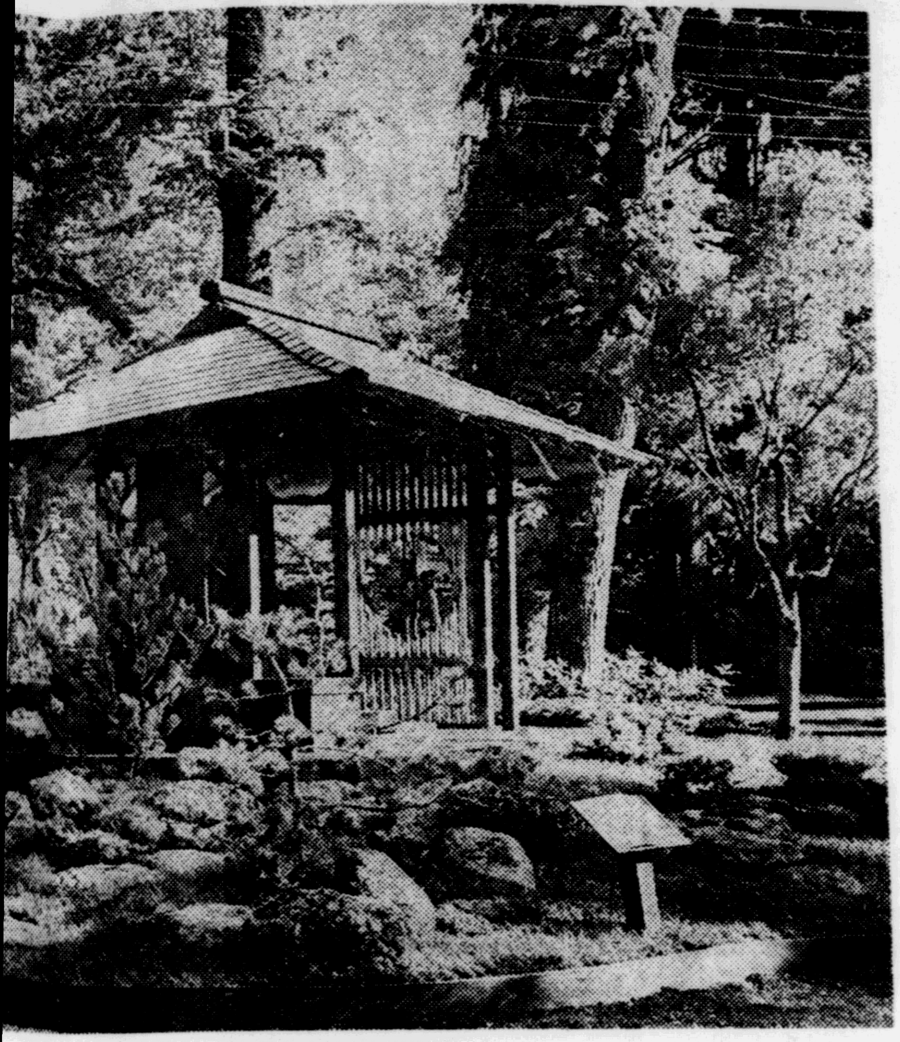


THOSE WHO attended last year's Marin Art and Garden Fair will not soon forget the Japanese garden, with its delicate teahouse, by Kimio Kimura of San Francisco, directly in front of the main entrance. Fancy though it looked, the effect of a teahouse and typical Japanese garden, according to Kimura, can be accomplished without spending a fortune. For example, the teahouse can be built with construction grade redwood lumber. A plywood panel can be used for one "wall" and, on that, can be the artistic cut-out or a painted scene. An asphalt shingled roof, with its soft texture and old look, can be used. A hand-rubbed paint job gives an interesting weathered look. The Japanese garden is

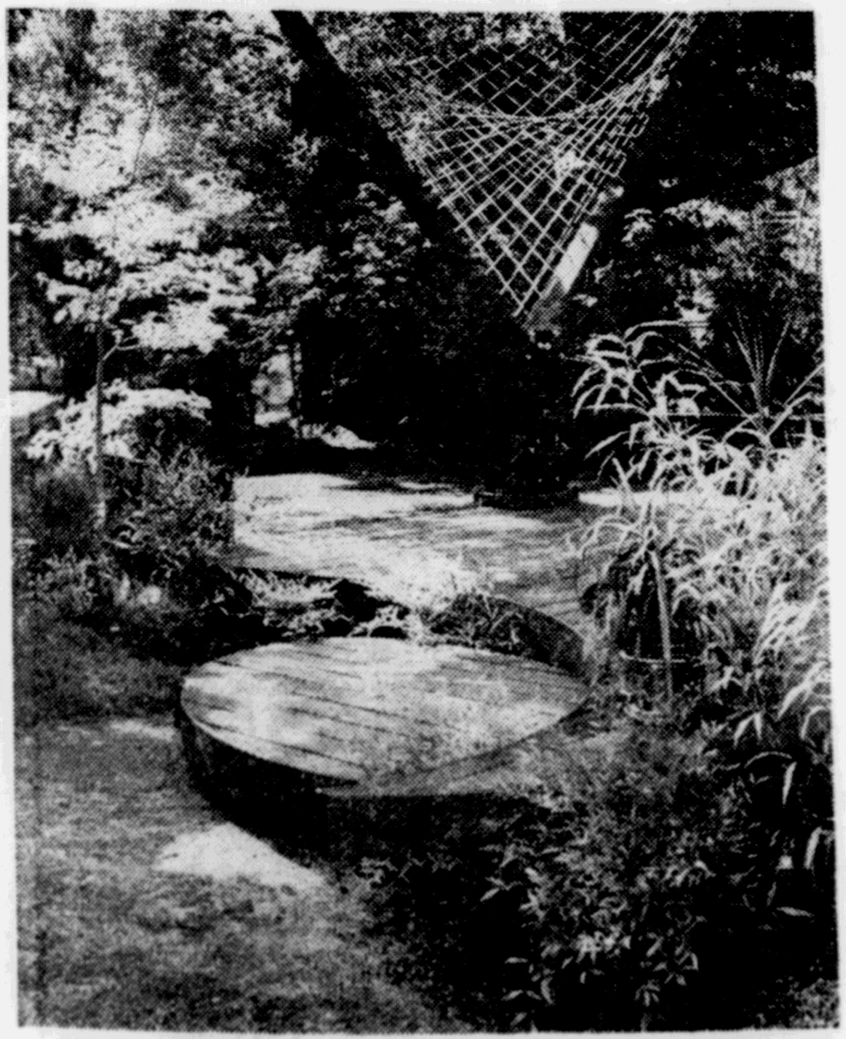


LILA LILLIE again comes up with a possible answer on how best to showcase one's unusual succulents and have a piece of garden statuary as well. This structure, she says, is simple to construct, using two-by-14 redwood planks. She, of course, uses it for succulents. It could be used as a display case for other plants, or used as a strawberry barrel. For a more dramatic effect she has added background lighting. In this unusual planter, she has used kalanchoe pumila with its soft blue-gray foliage and pink flowers. At the base of the structure is a giant echeveria hybrid 10 to 14 inches across. This plant's foliage comes in all colors from pale green to heavy red. The spiny plant in the foreground is aloe plicattelis.

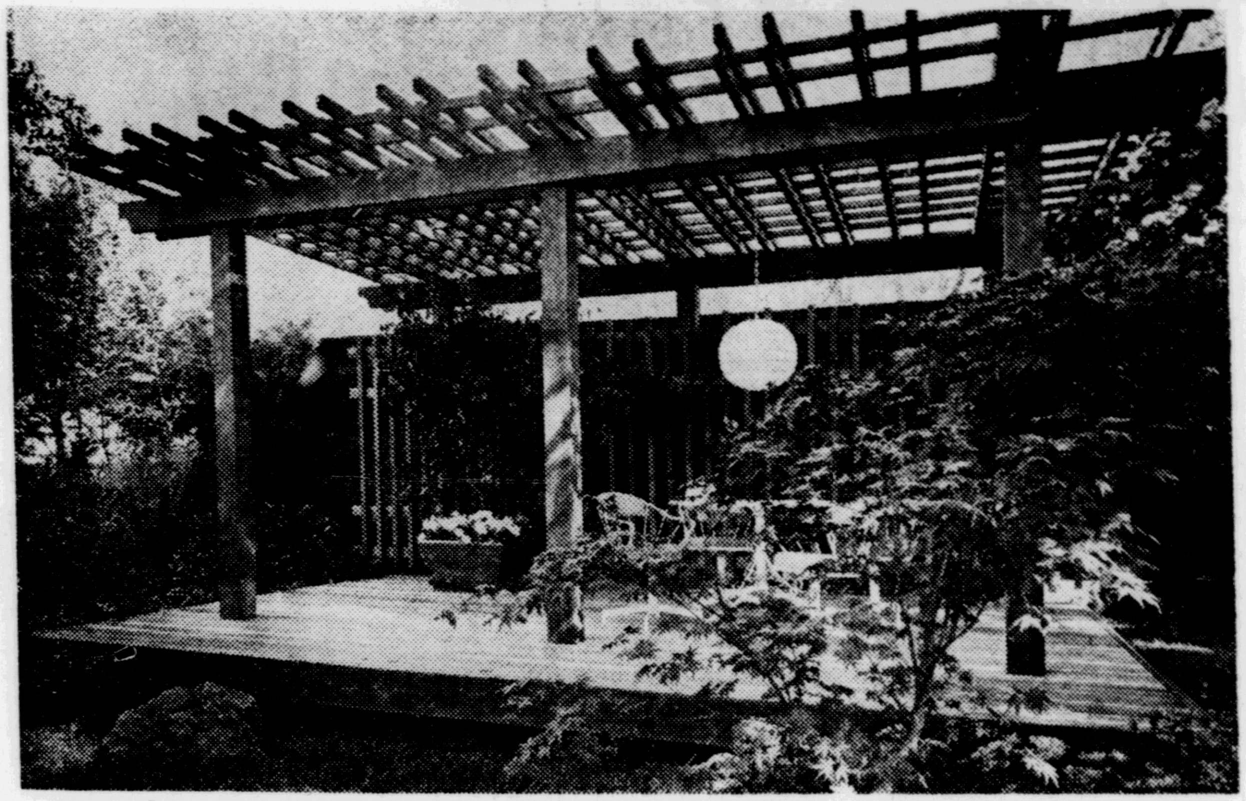
Marin's Own Fair



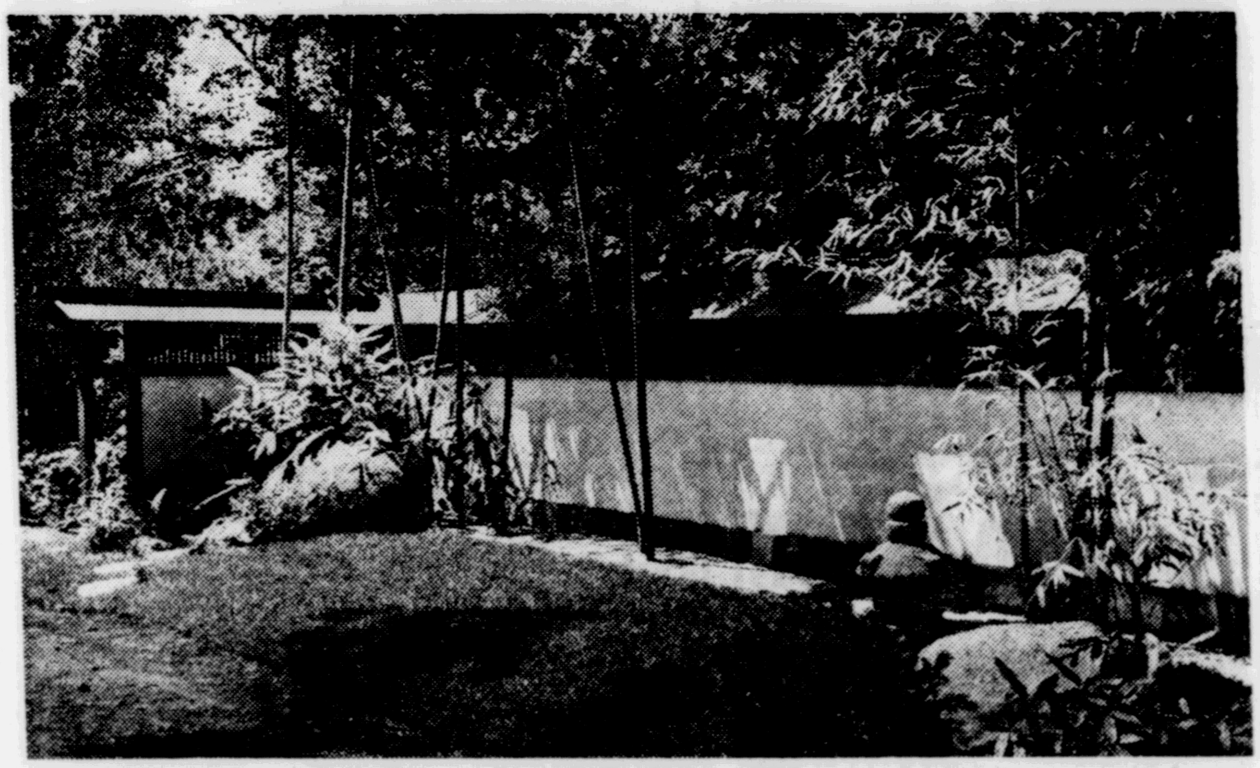
a great spray and pruning saver, as the typical ones do not have abundance of flowers. A few azaleas and rhododendrons, placed strategically about the teahouse and among the rocks, suffice. A small group of plants from the chrysanthemum family, can be placed near the teahouse for the color spot. A wood lantern, instead of the stone lantern, is actually more authentic for home use and can be fabricated quite easily. Rocks play an important part in any Japanese garden but they need not be heavy ones. Lava rock, red or black, as well as charcoal feather-rock, can be used effectively either singularly or in groups. Crushed rock, or water-washed pebbles can be used to denote water in or about the actual pond. (Photos by Ken Molino)



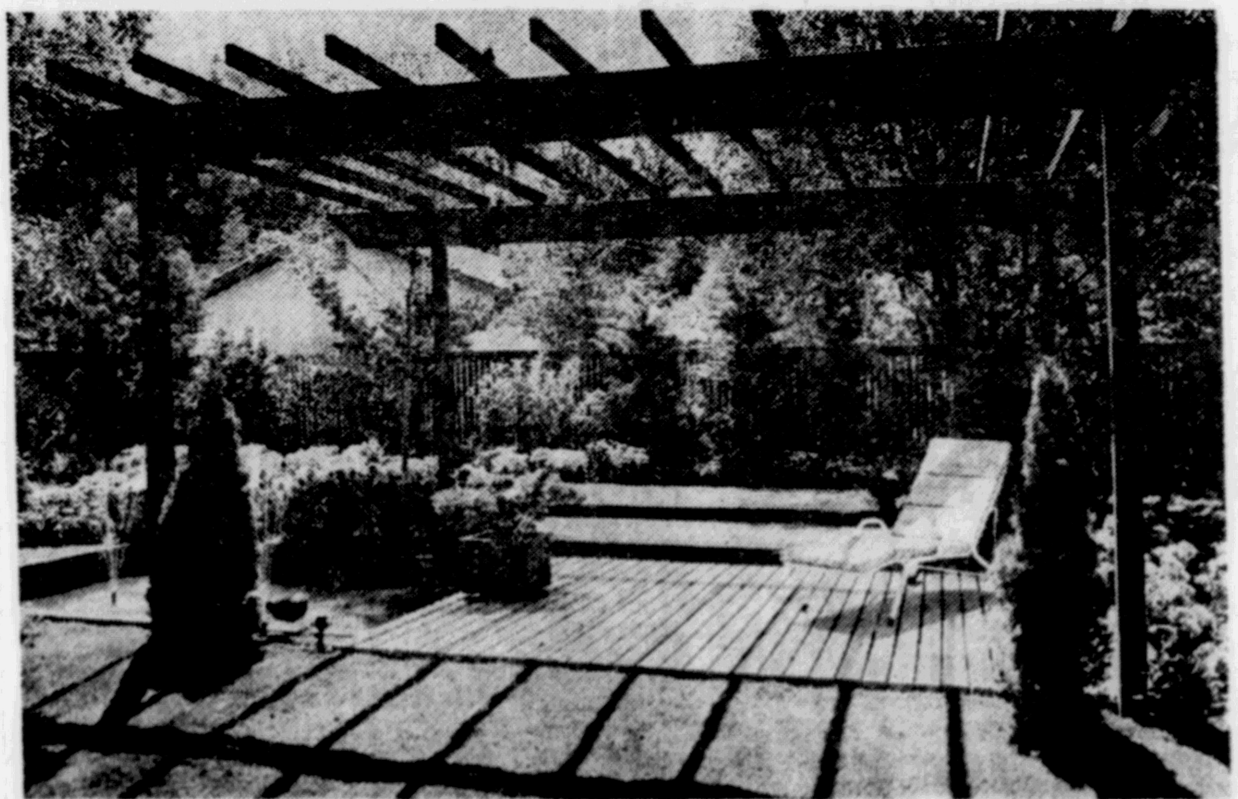
THE "NOW-TYPE" Marin home gardener, striving for a different effect, should, according to Raymond Bisel of Gardens Etc. and Tropic X, Fairfax, scout around for some new material. The creators of this garden came up with a totally different sunscreen, using yellow vinyl rope. This approach to the "Terrace Garden" category, earned them the "Best-in-Show" for construction. From it the home gardener can glean all sorts of ideas from the round, barrel-top step to the interesting shape of the deck itself. Bisel thinks the home gardener, seeking to create a quiet spot in his garden, should ask himself several questions: To what use is the area to be put? How will the transition be made from deck to other areas in the garden? How will it fit in with the house itself? All must be considered.



ENTERED IN THE "dining area" category in last year's "Bridge to Kyoto" themed fair, this simple wooden deck has a million uses in outdoor-living-conscious Marin County. Designed by Cottage Landscape Construction of Vallejo, such a deck could be easily built at floor level as a main-house extension. Note the simple frame lattice work in the rear. This treatment can be used to camouflage a garage or house wall. If the lattice is constructed about a foot away from the wall, it can add interesting shadow patterns. Lighting from behind creates after-dark interest. The Japanese maple, in the foreground, is an ideal tree for this arrangement. The petunia tub adds a note of color that can be picked up in the table appointments.



THIS IS A SECTION of Keith Jongewaard's Japanese style garden, created for last year's Japanese-themed Marin Art and Garden Fair. The plain lines, simple planting and uncluttered look may give the Marin gardener seeking to be fenced-in gracefully an idea. The rocks and bamboo give the clean-cut Oriental feeling. The gravel area, between the fence and the sod, is as much a visual barrier as the wall itself.



WHAT TO DO with a problem corner is answered here by the Bancroft Way Nursery in Berkeley. Note the two-step-up deck in the rear. The terrace itself can be introduced anywhere one has bare land to cover. It is of inexpensive wood with a pool on one end. The overhead trellis can be planted to vine if either wind or sun is a problem. The two Alberta spruces on either side of the terrace need not be planted directly in the ground, but can be tubbed and moved around as needed.

Tuberous Begonia Fans Are Loud In Praise Of Favorites

Gardeners who go for tuberous begonias are rarely lukewarm on the subject.

They'll tell you: "They're the most beautiful . . . most exotic . . . most everything."

At this season of the year you can start shopping for seedling plants at your nursery to be transplanted to the garden as soon as you get them home. And what a far-reaching choice you have!

THERE ARE ruffled double and picotee forms that resemble camellias—others that look like unbelievable roses, carnation doubles, and of course the hanging basket or Pendula form. Color-wise you can run the gauntlet from red, scarlet, pink, white, yellow, orange to salmon . . . mixing, matching or massing to your heart's delight.

Many aficionados of the begonia insist that the hanging basket type is the ultimate satisfaction because it is the answer to a landscaper's dream. With its beautiful cascading habit, these may be grown effectively in baskets or containers or spilling over walls. Each hanging basket will shower you with hundreds of blooms.

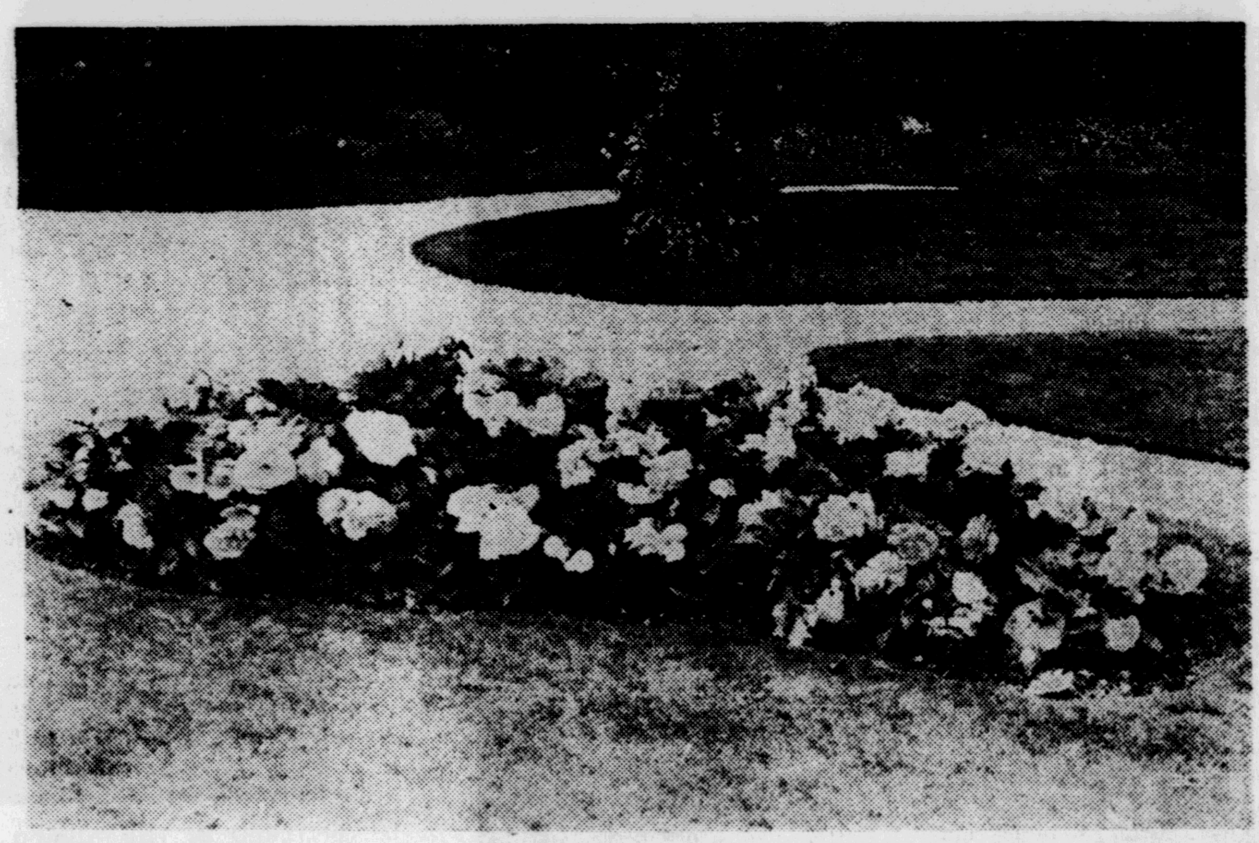
But it is only fair to say that there are as many others who exclaim: "Why put all your begonias in a basket when a mass planting at your feet or interspersed in a bed of greenery is such an immediate sensation."

THERE SEEMS to be only one answer to this problem: Get some of both.

Plant your seedlings or sprouted tubers in partial shade in a wind-free location. Perfect drainage is necessary.

Keep begonias moist after planting.

It won't be long now!



BEGONIAS CAN bed down along a walk, by a fence or up against a light shade tree, and give you an island of white, pink, red and yellow that provides the very color accent that is needed in any garden.

Safety Rules Will Prevent Those Power Mower Mishaps

One of the primary rules of safe lawn cutting operation is: Never let children operate the machine.

The same holds for inexperienced adults.

Going further, the Outdoor Power Equipment Institute warns gardeners never to leave a running lawn mower, riding mower or garden tractor unattended.

With about four million riding mower and lawn and garden tractors in use now, here are a few other do's and don'ts:

Do not wear loose-fitting clothing that could catch on moving parts. Wear sturdy shoes.

Never refuel a hot or running engine. When starting, be sure the vehicle is in neutral position.

Do not carry passengers. Don't direct discharge from the chute toward bystanders.

Turn off the engine before leaving the operator position and engage the parking brake.

Watch for holes in the ground and low tree branches. Know what is behind you before backing up.

Reduce speed on all slopes and sharp turns to prevent tipping.

Keep the machine in good operating condition and keep safety devices in place.

Keep the engine clean and free of accumulations of grass, leaves and spilled fuel that may cause fire.

Refuel out of doors and do not run the engine in a closed garage. Exhaust fumes are dangerous.

Espalier On Wood Delights The Eye

As an eye-delighting accent in the garden, nothing beats a beautifully formed espalier set against a simply designed wall or screen of rough, weather-silvered boards.

But to train an espalier often takes years, and the garden wall it adorns should be built to last a lifetime without refinishing or major repair. For that reason, it's smart to use pressure-treated framing lumber and fence boards, whether fir, cedar or pine.

The Magic Word In Plants Is 'Hybrid'

It's been a relatively short time since hybrids found their way out of corn fields into garden plots but, because gardeners are always looking for better things, the trend toward hybrid super-seeds is growing like Jack's proverbial bean stalk.

There are good reasons for increased interest in hybrids. Reasons like vitality, productivity, earliness, disease resistance, quality, uniformity, better size and adaptability.

AS DAVID BURPEE, head of Burpee Seeds, has pointed out, "There are families in America who still draw water with a hand pump. There's nothing wrong with this method because as sure as the handle goes up and down, water comes out. Still, it's hard to sell hand-pumps to people who're used to turning a faucet and watching water flow effortlessly from the tap. That's the way it is with people who've tried hybrids."

Burpee pioneered in hybrids. He was first with F1 hybrid marigolds, zinnias, double snapdragons and both single and all-double petunias; also first with hybrid tomatoes, cucumbers, egg plants, cantaloupes and zucchini squash, onions, cabbages, brussels sprouts, peppers and watermelons.

Basically a hybrid is no more than the offspring of mixed parentage. The trick is to find the right parents. Hundreds of test crosses between promising parent lines join the long parade of hybrid drop-outs.

STILL, SUCCESSES do come. Few in number and often only after years of work but, like geniuses, they are spectacular in their accomplishments. Because of their extraordinary ability, because they are super-plants, these successes — the climax Marigolds, the Zenith Zinnias, the Big Boy Tomatoes and dozens of others — are destined for fame in a way their parents never were.

Alas, hybrid super-plants can't reproduce themselves. The seeds they make revert and once again bring to life the weaker, more common stock from which they rose.

Then there are hybrids that are entirely sterile, like the three Nugget Marigolds — yellow, gold and orange. They're not just hybrids between different varieties; they're hybrid between different species — the American and the French Marigolds. Their chromosomes are unbalanced, so like the mule animal, they cannot reproduce seed at all.

EACH YEAR, then, in controlled plots of land, the bees and sometimes even the human hand, must create them anew. Building hybrids becomes costly and when the gardener picks up a packet of hybrid seed he's sure to notice the price. He might even grumble that he can buy a lot more seeds for a lot less money if he steers clear of hybrids.

Burpee once answered, "Yes, hybrids cost more, but they are worth much more."

The attribute most responsible for the big switch among gardening enthusiasts can be summed up in one word, reliability.

A hybrid seed is a reliable seed. Hybrid seeds staunchly become super-plants and the plants consistently produce gorgeous flowers or extra-good-tasting vegetables. The gardener knows, from the moment he drops a hybrid seed into the rich loam of his garden that when its season of maturity arrives, he'll have abundant reward for the extra money he invested.

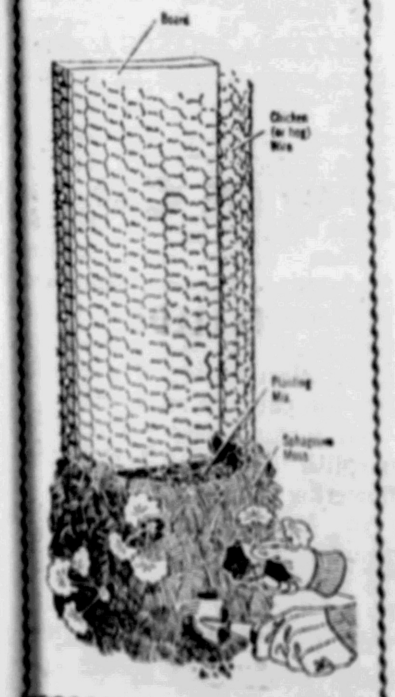
Tomato Time

WITH THE DANGER of frost past, now is the time to plant your tomatoes. You don't need a garden plot. A sunny corner will accommodate a few or even a single plant that will yield a worthwhile crop of luscious tomatoes. Tomatoes will stand a deep planting, like a continuous supply of moisture, and also appreciate light, frequent feedings of fertilizer.

Look To Evergreens For Year-Around Beauty

Instant Trees

THE PETUNIA tree can spring up overnight. What you do is build your tree as shown below. Sphagnum moss, burlap or figerglass can be set inside a wire mesh cylinder to hold the plant mix. Nor is the creative person restricted to petunias in his choice of his flowering plant.



If our gardens looked the same in every season, we'd get tired of them in no time at all

Half the fun of gardening is watching for the first daffodils, enjoying the cheerful faces of the newest petunias and zinnias, and seeing the chrysanthemums blaze out in the fall.

However, there is a permanent framework we have to create in our landscape if we are going to enjoy looking at it every month in the year. Glossy, evergreen shrubs are one of best ways to insure year round beauty, and if we stint on them, we cheat our flowers of the background they deserve.

IF YOUR garden didn't make the showing you wanted it to in certain months last year— if there were times when you seemed to have no garden at all —this is the time to start planting evergreen shrubs for a rich, all-year effect. Shrubs that go in now can get well established before the summer heat.

This is an ideal time to plant them because the soil is so workable at this time of year that you can dig it deeply and condition it well for permanent plantings.

When you plant evergreens for landscape design, you are thinking mainly of their ability to design all year. But don't think you have to forego seasonal color in the shrubs themselves. Some of our most useful evergreen shrubs put on an annual flower or berry display that would make them worthwhile if they only lasted one season.

PINK INDIA Hawthorne is one of these, and if you ask for the new variety, "Enchantress," you'll get large, rich, rose-pink flowers in thick clusters from late winter till early summer, followed by clusters of blue-black berries. This shrub's growing habit is dwarf and compact, and it shows off luxuriant, glossy green foliage to superb advantage.

Pink India Hawthorne will tolerate either sun or part shade, and seashore or desert locations, so plant it with confidence and enjoy its well-groomed beauty in the border or as a foundation plant.

Pyracantha is a shrub that we usually think of as a brilliant cover for rough places, or as a handsome wall espalier. But this year, with the introduction of the compact little "Tiny Tim," we can enjoy this bright berried shrub anywhere in the garden where we need an ornamental, low landscape plant. Practically thornless, and growing no higher than three feet, its tiny rich green foliage is adorned with long clusters of good sized cinnamon red berries that last through the holiday season.

YOU CAN count on its color to make a terrific foil for your chrysanthemums this fall, and its compact mounds of foliage to add architectural strength to your landscape all year.

Another excellent landscape shrub for small borders is the holly-like, variegated osmanthus. If you can give it part shade and an acid soil, you can enjoy its cheerful green and white good looks as an all year contrast to your darker evergreens.

We usually think of azaleas in relation to their flowers; but one of their most valuable assets is their year round attractive foliage. In fact in Japanese gardens, the azalea is used chiefly for its out-of-bloom appearance, and is commonly pruned to low mounds to prevent its flowering at all.

HERE IN THE West we wouldn't dream of sacrificing our azalea blossoms, but we should remember when we buy these glamorous plants that we are investing not only in sheets of spectacular bloom in the spring, but in all year landscape value.

All the shrubs mentioned above are naturally low growing, with medium or fine-textured leaves that make a pleasant foil for seasonal color and a soft green mass all year. Your nurseryman can recommend others that will serve the same purpose.

Plants like this are the ideal foreground for larger, stronger textured shrubs you will want to add, such as rhododendrons or photinias. With handsome, well-placed trees and a neat lawn to complete the framework, you'll have a garden to enjoy whether it's in or out of bloom.

Botanically, some of the plants listed above are: Pink India Hawthorne, (Raphiolepis indica rosea); False Holly, (osmanthus heterophyllus variegatus).

Rating Of The Roses

Peace, A Hybrid Tea, Leads Parade Of These Most Beautiful Of Shrubs

The American Rose Society has rated some 1,000 varieties of roses to help rosarians in making their selections for spring planting.

The ratings range from 10.0 for the perfect rose, to 9.9 to 9.0 for outstanding; 8.9 to 8.0 for excellent, 7.9 to 7 for good, 6.9 to 6.0 for fair, and 5.9 and lower for questionable.

AMONG HYBRID teas with high rank are Peace, a yellow blend, medium height, 9.4; Mme. Elisa de Vilmorin, medium height, medium red, 9.0; Aida, medium red, 8.9; Fragrant Cloud, orange, 8.8, and three with 8.4 — Charlotte Armstrong, tall, deep pink; Azevedo, pink blend, and Mediterranea, pink blend.

Floribundas: Betty Prior, medium pink, 9.0; Red Glory, 8.7; Little Darling, yellow blend, 8.6, and with 8.4 — Border Gem, pink blend; Iceberg and Ice White, both white; and Spartan, orange.

Miniatures; starina, light red, 9.01; Cinderella, white, and Pumila, dark pink, both 9.00, and Dwarfking, medium yellow, and Pink Cameo, medium pink, both 8.7.

Climbers: City of York, white, 8.6, and Chevy Chase, deep red, 8.1.

AMONG HYBRID teas rated tops for color were Chrysler Imperial, red; Royal Highness, light pink; King's Ransom, deep yellow; Pascali, white; Peace, yellow blend.

Best floribundas for color are Spartan, orange-red; Betty Prior, pink; Moonsprite, yellow; Ice White, white; Little Darling, yellow, for blends.

High ranking grandifloras are Queen Elizabeth, medium pink; Montezuma, orange; Carousel, deep red, Ole, orange, and Camelot, medium pink.

ONE OF AMERICA'S most beloved comedians has been honored in the naming of this new rose from Germain's Inc. — the Red Skelton. The flowers progress from glowing orange-red hues as buds to a rich vermilion when partially open to bright red tones a maturity. Open flowers measure up to six inches across.

The Beautiful Evergreen With The Impossible Name

One of the most enthusiastically planted evergreen shrubs in California has the unlikely popular name of Raphiolepis.

Like many another five syllable plant name, it's pronunciation by the layman varies a great deal. Correctly, the accent is placed on the third syllable, "ol".

Nurserymen have tried to have their customers adopt the Raphiolepis' common name—Indian Hawthorn, but to no avail. Hawthorns are supposed to be deciduous trees and not low-growing evergreen shrubs, according to California gardeners.

WHATEVER name you choose for it, personally, you are going to find this handsome, hardy shrub a useful one in your garden. It grows in sun or shade, thrives in any well-drained soil, responds to food and water, or will grow without, if necessary.

Raphiolepis is used as a ground cover, a foundation plant for houses that sit close to the ground, a tubbed specimen or espaliered on a fence or wall. Its bright pink flowers start blooming in February and keep going into May.

The nurseryman who introduced it to California in the depression 30s thought it might deserve a paragraph in his catalog, but soon found that he was growing almost as many Raphiolepis as all of his other plants together, and still not meeting the demand.

SEVERAL CHANCE seedlings have evolved from the original pink "Hawthorn." The first was Coates Crimson. The flowers open a deep rosy pink, fade to a lighter pink. The growth is more compact than the original.

Then came the varieties Springtime, glowing pink, and Enchantress, a rich rose. Their foliage is leathery and glossy green when mature. New leaves, like the parent's are bronzy.

All forms produce a crop of purplish berries following the flowering season.

To keep your Raphiolepis ground-hugging, just trim off the vertical growth in summer. To get the plants off the ground, trim the shoots around the edges, forcing new growth upward.

Don't Get Hooked On Symmetry When You Plan Outdoors

By VIVIAN BROWN

Try for an asymmetrical outdoor look around your house.

The "sort of just - grew" look may be far prettier than static beauty achieved with costly plantings and props.

Nature doesn't conspire to make the outdoors symmetrical but somehow man's idea of house grounds beauty is an orderly arrangement of flowers, shrubs, lawn. The perfection achieved is almost always boring in its implication that anything less is imperfect. This idea of landscaping is so ingrained in Americans that neighbors who can't afford it may envy it.

THEY CAN afford something far more attractive and it can be free.

Nature presents us with the means — stones, wood, rocks — to enhance natural settings. The idea is to look at nature's largesse and see how you can use it in your own setting.

Here are some ideas:

Borders of small pebbles and stones around a house can be very pretty, and pots of flowers may be sunk into them from time to time, if desired. Many people gather pretty pebbles at beaches. (Many people are using the imported shiny black stones, particularly effective around modern houses, but these have become expensive due to the demand. Some people buy chips of white stones.)

Natural stones and wood may be used for steps along paths or a house walk. If one worries that stones are hard on the feet, small stones may be set into either side of large concrete slabs for an attractive effect. One can walk on the smooth section. These slabs should be put down in an interesting arrangement rather that set one behind the other.

Wood logs may be used in a variety of ways. Cut them on end and set the circular cuts in gravel as steps to a little bench under a tree or path to a tool house. Use them lengthwise combined with rocks as risers on an outdoor stairway.

Rocks can provide charming interest in a shallow pond. Stones slightly higher than the water level can make an interesting "bridge" over a pond. A large stone slab can be set over two large flat rocks placed some distance apart to emphasize the bridge idea. Many people use willow trees at ponds and these are very pretty providing the pond doesn't dry. Willow trees will seek water elsewhere and if they are too near the house, may find their way to the water pipes, wrecking them.

Bridging the gap between a deck and nearby pond may be done with a path or more ambitious arrangement of pebbles and stones. If it is at all possible to divert the water with a little trickle through the rocks, the effect will be to tie the two together as if the deck were closer to the pond.

Ponds can come alive too by bordering them with small rocks or pebbles. This is an especially good effect when the lawn around the pond is not too attractive. The stones will offset the scruffy look, picking up the slack between the water and grass, and a statue placed somewhere can provide further enhancement.

A great many ideas may be used to liven up sandy areas around beach houses. Rocks seem to hold up better than some wood steps. Patterns may be made in the sand with rakes. Swirling patterns provide the best results. If the pattern is disturbed by wind, it will still look attractive. Youngsters like that project and many attractive designs emanate from the child using a rake to provide undulating effects in the sand.

ONE FAMILY did an interesting thing with the sand around their house in anticipation of a beach party. They had the children build low mushroom-shaped seats of sand damped with water. They put small circular pieces of colorful plastic over each sand mound after it was dry. These were dotted all over the place for a very attractive look.

It was more fun than sitting flat on the sand although in a short time all the "mushrooms" did flatten out. But the idea remained colorful due to the little plastic covers.

Shade That Cuts Wind

Everyone likes a cool breeze across the patio or deck, but no one wants a real wind.

To catch the breezes and eliminate stronger winds, here's an idea.

Build open frames of four-by-four-inch Douglas fir or white fir lumber at either end of the patio or deck, anchoring them firmly to deck framing or the patio paving. Make the frames four feet wide by six feet tall, using the four-by-fours for sides as well as top and bottom members.

Next, attach screw eyes along the bottom member, spacing them about three inches apart. Then install "window shades" of brightly colored canvas on the underside of the top member.

When the wind whips up, simply pull down the shades, lash their lower edges into the screw eyes at the bottom, and you have a fine wind baffle. When the weather's fine, leave the shades rolled up.

Paint the frames black or stain them a natural wood tone.

TWO BORDER BEAUTIES

AN EFFECTIVE garden border should be all of one plant, so that there is no great variance in heighth or spread. But the colors can be varried. At top, pink heather alyssum makes an effective border. In bottom photo, the mini-pink Thumbelina dwarf zinnia, about six inches high, is another pretty border possibility.

Trees That Offer Shade And Bloom

One usually plants a tree either for its shade — or for its bloom.

But, in California, there are a surprisingly large number of trees worth planting for either — or for both. They are trees of modest size and considerable refinement, two factors which make them ideal for small gardens.

A good example is the Acacia family, whose massed yellow blooms enrich our part of the state each spring. Of all the yellow in the horticultural world, there is none to compare with the show of Acacias in full bloom.

THE BAILEY Acacia, best for flower and shade, too, is a tree of no more than 30 feet in height with good spread. It has attractive, evergreen fernlike foliage.

Its bloom in late winter and early spring defies description — you can see it a mile away!

Not unlike the Acacia in foliage is the deciduous Silk Tree. It differs in growth and flowering. The Silk Tree also has fernlike foliage, but it makes a flat-headed, arching, tree with good spread. But, its summer blooms are pink — a lovely silken pink shade.

Its spreading branches make a canopy of light shade — suitable for sitting under to enjoy during summertime's outdoor living.

STILL ANOTHER tree with fernlike foliage is the Jacaranda, grown primarily in Southern California but found also at times in our part of the state. It is larger than either the Bailey Acacia or Silk Tree, and has a full, rounded head. The lavender blue blooms are spectacular in late May and June, and carry into the summer months.

From the Eucalyptus family come several flowering trees worth planting, with two especially suitable for the small garden. These are the Red Flowering Gum and the Red Iron Bark, both of which produce summer blooms.

Red Flowering Gum makes a substantial tree with less of the open, airy look about it than most members of the family. You see it in parkway plantings, and it is equally good in the garden, where its modest size will produce modest shade.

RED IRON BARK is a more slender tree, more typically a Eucalyptus in its habit of growth. The narrow leaves are pendulous and loosely carried. The greyish bark breaks to reveal a red under layer, which gives the tree its common name. Pink flowers come primarily in summer.

Also, don't overlook other Eucalyptus varieties your nurseryman has to offer. You'll be surprised just how many members of the family there are to provide unusual growth and colors for the garden.

Be sure to tell the nurseryman the approximate space you have available so he can recommend the best-suited Eucalyptus variety.

The Silk Oak makes a fine shade tree and while in bloom attracts much attention. Tall and rather slender, the Silk Oak produces bunches of golden yellow flowers in the summertime. A tree of considerable refinement, it also has a ferny foliage, and is a lush, dark green in color.

It's not really an oak at all, but with anything so beautiful, who cares about names?

MANY OTHER trees that will create shade and provide beauty with blooms are available in nurseries.

Now is an excellent time to plant trees. Experienced gardeners know that trees planted now will get the jump on the growing season.

'Mum Society Speaks Out For Its Favorite Plant

Chrysanthemums have come a long way in the last 10 years with California and Florida hybridizers, as well as Japanese growers, developing some 800 new cultivars in that period.

So reports the Chrysanthemums Society of Marin, composed of the county's most ardent 'mum enthusiasts.

"It is now possible in Marin to have 'mums blooming from July until Christmas time," the society says. But it adds that the beautiful show or exhibition types produce in the September-October-November period to enhance the autumn garden when it most needs flowers.

BEST RESULTS can be obtained by starting new plants each year, the society says. Old clumps are often diseased or develop an ungainly appearance. New plants are easier to control and will provide a better quality of blooms.

'Mums like a rich soil with good drainage. They are heavy feeders, so a good fertilization program should be scheduled throughout the growing period up until the time the buds show color.

A pinching back of the growth in July will encourage branching and will also prevent the plants from growing too tall. "The less the amount of stem, the larger the blooms," the society explains.

ALSO IMPORTANT is a good staking and tying program to keep the 'mums from sprawling and becoming unsightly.

Also vital is a good pest and fungus control program.

'Mums should never be planted closer than two feet to another plant, since good air circulation is important.

The Chrysanthemum Society of Marin conducts a plant sale each May, offering Marinites an excellent opportunity to acquire cultivars of the types best suited to our area.

A GARDEN IN THE AIR

The Bottle Brush Will Do The Job In The Tough Places

It's As Exotic In Appearance As It Is Durable In Its Growth

Not all of us are blessed with perfect growing conditions and there are times we long for something showy as well as durable.

This perfectly describes the Bottle Brushes.

It was not too many decades ago that this rather exotic looking shrub with its brilliant red "flowers" in the shape of brushes (such as those you use to clean baby bottles) was a true curiosity. It was rare enough to stop traffic.

But those days are long gone.

PLANT BREEDERS have carefully selected the finest of the Bottle Brushes to coax the biggest, reddest flowers out of the feathery plant and you can see how successful they have been by looking along highway and by-way from Eureka to San Diego.

The Bottle Brushes are of interest to home owners because they can be used in many ways and they thrive on heat or tolerate the vagaries of coastal life with its fog-again-sun-again weather.

The Bottle Brushes will grow in strong wind or where there is no wind; they will hold down a roving sand dune, if you insist, or they will keep soil from being washed away from a hot, dry bank where other plants cry for help. And yet they are so presentable, and so eager to please, they'll perform beautifully in good soil, even tolerate and deserve a place on the edge of a lawn — provided the drainage is good.

THEY DON'T like to get their feet wet and keep them wet. The water must drain away to keep them happy.

The "flower" that attracts the eye is actually individual stamens in a cluster of tiny flowers, thus the bristly effect. These are excellent flowers for cutting as they will last two weeks or even more in the house. And after you cut off a bloom, the plant soon puts out new growth and you get new flowers.

If you cut them for use in the house, however, remember to pound the ends of the stems gently before putting them in water. It aids the capillary action.

THIS AUSTRALIAN native seemingly has endless virtues. So far no insects seem to bother it. It does not rust or mildew or do anything wrong or have any ills. You can use it as an informal hedge for it will take shearing and shaping.

While it will take considerable pruning, it is better not to prune it too much because its natural shape is quite pleasing. However, if space is a problem, you can espalier it — prune it so it will grow flat against a wall with arms outspread.

Do not overlook its ability to tolerate wind, including the very tough trade winds that blow all along our coast during the summer. By using the taller sorts, you can create a sheltered area where the many handsome shrubs and perennials that don't appreciate a trade wind will grow without difficulty.

AN INTERESTING combination would be one of the Bottle Brushes with strawberries. Or they go well with the Australian Fuchsia.

For good color contrast if used to hold dry banks or some similar difficult area, couple the Bottle Brushes with one of the Cotoneaster groundcovers.

The upright Bottle Brushe are best where they stand alone or with other members of their tribe. Their leaves are rather light green and seem more like needles (but not sharp) than leaves and one of the family is even called the Pineleaf Bottle Brush, so they obviously are "different" from the general run of garden shrubs. They can readily be used as specimen plants, standing alone to show their stamens to best advantage; or they can even be used as large foundation plantings where there is a rather high foundation problem to overcome

THE WEEPING or Prostrate Bottle Brushes, however, wil serve where the foundation i low.

There are other forms than the red-brushed varieties, including a white and purple, bu both are quite rare and unlikely to be found in even your bes nurseries — and that is usually for a very good reason. Th red-brushed sorts are the mos spectacular by far.

Another beauty that is quit rugged and is only just comin into its own is the Brazilian Sky flower which can stand mois coastal conditions but prefer the hot, dry, well-drained condi tions of the Bottle Brushes.

AS THE NAME implies, thi has blue flowers, a good, clea blue, in June or July, bloom about two months then yield to clusters of golden berries tha are a handsome contrast to th bright green leaves.

Heat it likes, but unlike th Bottle Brushes, the Skyflowe can't take hard freezing unles it has some degree of shelter

Don't Plant Your Trees Too Deeply

Don't bury your fine shade trees.

Valuable trees are in danger of dying because soil is heaped around their bases or because they are planted too deep.

"These practices occur most frequently where new houses are being built," says tree man Robert Bartlett.

Lots are filled in order to establish proper grade for lawns and outdoor living space. But when tree roots are buried under such fill, the health of the tree will decline. Without air and water, the tree is susceptible to disease and insects.

How can you tell if your tree is buried?

The trunk should flare — spread out — as it enters the soil. If it doesn't, the tree is buried.

Some remedies: Scrape away excess fill. Place tile pipe in geometric fashion to allow air, water and food to reach the roots. Spread stone or coarse gravel and cover with a layer of salt hay or similar substance. Add top soil to bring up grade level.

Paradise In The Pacific

Fijians Give Their Guests Tender, Loving Care Now

Not so long ago, perhaps as recent as the mid-1800s, visitors to the Fijis sometimes wound up in a stewing pot, or whatever it was the islanders used for cooking people on festive occasions.

While "the good old days" are usually looked upon as belonging to the past, in Fiji's case, at least, it would seem that the very best days are right now.

At least that is true for the visitors who are thronging to the sun-filled islands in the South Pacific.

EXCEPT FOR dietary habits and for the new hotels that minister tender, loving care to tourists, not much has changed in the Fijis. They are still far from spoiled.

More and more people are visiting Fiji, taking advantage of increased air and ship links with the outside.

Those who arrive by plane step out at Nadi Airport, 145 miles from the capital city of Suva on the big island of Viti Levu. The airport was built during World War II and is probably further from its destination city than any other in the world, but Fiji Airlines delivers its passengers to Suva in 45 minutes by smaller plane. Or they can make the trip by car, driving over a road that isn't paved, but is lightly trafficked, and offers delightful scenery including native Fijian villages where the residents have genuine smiles for the visitor.

SOME OF THE villages may be inspected because the natives are kind enough to let strangers wander through their homes.

Near the airport are several excellent hotels including the Mocambo, the Sky Lodge and the Tanoa, with swimming pools and everything else to make gue the multi-colored tropical fish and coral.

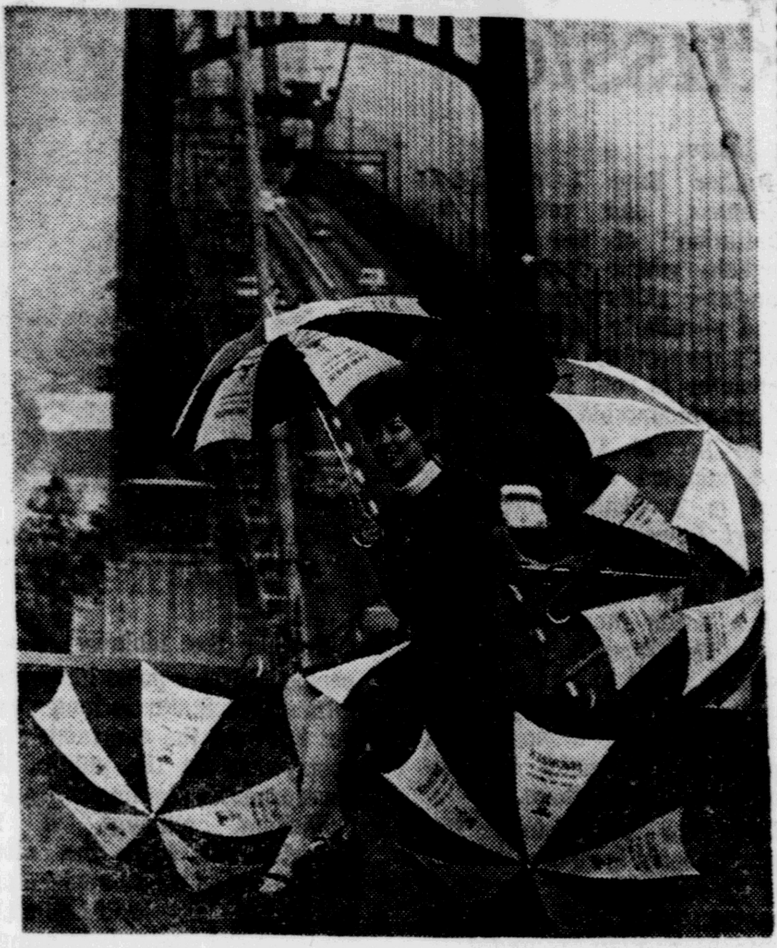
THE VENERABLE old Grand Pacific Hotel, with its new additions, is the dean of such homes-away-from-home in this part of the world, and the Travelodge adjacent to it is also good. Four miles out of town is Trade Winds and, like the others, it is on the beach. All have very reasonable prices.

Sightseeing is what would be expected; verdant mountains, the famed fire-walkers (who may or may not be doing their "thing"), sugar cane plantations, coconuts everywhere, excellent beaches for fossicking and snorkeling, swimming, boating, and an all-round good time that can be shared by all.

Fiji is one of those places that visitors hate to leave. Most of them do so reluctantly, wishing that more experienced planning had permitted them to stay a few days longer.



THERE IS NO getting around it, admits the Visitors and Convention Bureau of Greater Vancouver, B. C., that area does have rain. But the bureau, in urging Californians to include British Columbia in their 1969 vacation plans, points out that it will provide the umbrellas for visitors caught in showers who call at its offices. The courtesy umbrellas, some of which are shown here by pretty Barbara Kelly atop Lion's Gate Bridge, are loaned free.

A Vital Art In Russia

POETS ON STREET CORNERS, by Olga Carlisle; Random House, 429 pages, $6.95. Reviewed by Laurel Shapiro.

Second only to soccer in the minds of the people, poetry is a vital and popular art in the Soviet Union.

Editions sell out in a few hours. Public readings are major events and an audience of 10,000 is considered normal for a popular poet.

This book, a portrait of 15 Russian poets of this and the previous generation, with a good sampling of their work, gives an intriguing inside view of the role the poet plays in the USSR. In spite of lamentable handicaps, it is a role that could hardly be more in contrast to the modest attention his American counterpart attracts.

While oral poetry is a strong Russian tradition, one must have reservations about the quality of poetry that is adaptable to such broad, casual declamation, for it necessarily must be devoid of subtlety and depth. Miss Carlisle, who knew several of these poets as a child, records that Russian poets are indeed concerned that contemporary work is watered down for street corner consumption, and fear that in some cases it is becoming no more significant than popular song.

However, most of the poets in this collection seem far removed from pop art (the exception is a pitifully inept present-day group called the "barrack poets"). It is a splendid collection: the poem in Russian on one page, and the English re-creation on the other, so that those lucky enough to know both languages can compare the two renditions at a glance.

Miss Carlisle explains that problems of translation had much to do with which poets were included, and this collection is not to be taken as an indication of the poets' standing in Russia.

Rather than technical closeness, she prefers an "imitation" of the poem in English, which demands high translator skills plus a cast of mind peculiarly attuned to the poet's personality. Matching translator to poet is sometimes an insurmountable difficulty.

The list of Americans who have adapted the Soviet work here is a distinguished one: Robert Lowell, Adrienne Rich, Richard Wilbur, W. S. Merwin, Denise Levertov, Stanley Kunitz and a dozen more well-known poets. The Russian poets best known in America are Pasternak, Voznesensky and Yevtushenko; one welcomes this opportunity to make the acquaintance of the others.

Just how successfully the original poetry is re-created can only be judged by the Russian-speaking, but in most cases the poems work, often excitingly so, as poems in English.

OLGA CARLISLE IS the author of "Poets on Street Corners," a study of the role of the poet in the Soviet Union.

Despite the idolatry of the people, Russian poets have their difficulties. Stalin is long dead, but knowing the enormous hold poetry has on the public, the government maintains control of publishing, although it is powerless to stop the often astonishing circulation, in typescript, of officially unrecognized poets. It is a matter of grave concern to Soviet intellectuals that many of their poets of the first stature cannot be published for political reasons.

But it is also true that many a poet of the first importance cannot get published in the United States, either — although that is due to public indifference, not to say distaste. A quite different — one would hesitate to say healthier — situation.

Sparks And Explosions From A Man Of Many Struggles

Reviews Of New Reading

ELDRIDGE CLEAVER: POST-PRISON WRITINGS AND SPEECHES edited by Robert Scheer; Ramparts/Random House, 212 pages, $5.95. Reviewed by Jeff Greer.

Readers who let the ugly, short words in this book dull their minds to the real message this black man is broadcasting are either too sensitive ever to cope with the world's realities, or too stupid to realize that anyone else has feelings, fears, hates or hopes.

Cleaver's second book really isn't a book like his "Soul on Ice." That was a carefully-thought-out, carefully written and polished work done during the slow time of prison days. The new book is a series of sparks, explosions and sometimes flinty fizzles struck from Cleaver's day-to-day contact with the crises of the outside world.

Many of the pieces were written under deadline pressure as a reporter from Ramparts Magazine; some were not even written, but rather dictated. Others are transcripts of speeches.

Subscribers who read Ramparts will already have seen much of the material, more in the context of then-current events than it is now that Cleaver has vanished and the college Black Power scene has overshadowed the struggle in the streets and polling places upon which the Panthers cut their eyeteeth and Cleaver reported.

The book's readers will not find a single, steady viewpoint in Cleaver's writings. He was going through too much development, having too many intensely personal struggles. He wrote from day-to-day, and not in retrospect in most pieces.

But, the pieces are gutsy, and sometimes offer sheer expressive beauty that might sound trite written by someone else.

Book For Gun Buffs On Weapon That Tamed West

SAGA OF THE COLT SIX-SHOOTER by George E. Virgines; Frederick Fell, 199 pages, $7.95. Reviewed by Bryce W. Anderson.

"Saga of the Colt Six-Shooter" is a book for gun buffs; more particularly, for Colt gun buffs; more particularly still, for buffs of the Colt single-action six-shooter, best known of the Colt Patent Firearms Co.'s products.

Even in such a circumscribed field, there is plenty of variety, for the Colt "SA" came in several calibres (although the .45 is by far the best known) and in various models. It was introduced first as a cavalry arm, but played its most famous role as the favorite side-arm of frontiersmen in the taming of the West.

The book is in three parts: the first a history of the manufacture of the revolvers; the second, "Historic Colts and the Famous Men Who Used Them"; the third, recent developments in Colt manufacture.

Even the second part, however, is concerned almost entirely with the guns; there is little material about the men.

George E. Virgines is not much of a writer, but he has assembled a tremendous amount of information about his favorite side-arm. It's a valuable book — for gun buffs.

Indians Vs. The Wicked Capitalists

STRONG WIND by Miguel Angel Asturias; Delacorte Press, 242 pages, $6.95. Reviewed by Laurel Shapiro.

Winner of the 1967 Nobel Prize for Literature, Miguel Asturias has spent many years in exile from his native Guatemala, although he now serves in his country's diplomatic service.

It is also paradoxical that, while his political convictions are an integral part of his work, he won his reputation as a stylist and innovator; he has been compared to Joyce and Faulkner.

This book, translated by Gregory Rabassa, is the first of a projected trilogy on the exploitation of an unnamed Central American country by a North American banana company, and embodies his compassionate involvement with the jungle Indians.

The plot is unbashedly full-blown melodrama, without subtlety in its indictment of the wicked capitalists. An example is the Green Pope, mysterious New York head of Tropical Banana, who is straight out of fantastic comics. In fact, throughout, Asturias is not able to do much with the Americans; even the gringo savior, who leads the Indians in their rebellion, and his wife, with the green-gold, as in bananas, hair, are stiff and lifeless.

It is the Indians the author renders with exciting artistry, in all the sweat and poetry of their lives. Often the Indians and brooding jungle seem to merge; it is here, in the jungle, that Asturias' richly textured, lyrical prose works supremely well. He is robustly earthy at times also; Indians and jungle do indeed merge when the men, insane with exhaustion and fever, mistake the banana trees for alluring women.

The oppressive atmosphere of plantation life seems to close over the reader's head; he, too, is saturated by the tropical heat and implacable greed of the banana company that drains the people of their eager dreams of the "green gold."

Having paid that great compliment to his talent, one must go on to say that there is a disjointed, almost amateurish quality to the way Asturias handles his material. He drifts haphazardly from one group of people to another, introduces a character in depth and then drops him completely, stretches and telescopes time abruptly, seemingly for his own convenience.

MIGUEL A. ASTURIAS
Compassionate involvement

But for all that, the doomed struggle of the Indians is presented in unforgettable, full-color intensity.

Comic Intrigue By Lovable Cast With Bloody Incidents

BLOOD OF STRAWBERRIES by Henry Van Dyke; Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 278 pages, $5.50. Reviewed by James E. Williams.

A note to the mystery fan: This short novel is not in the true sense a tome from a sleuth story writer. However, it's full of comical intrigue, a few bloody (strawberry) incidents and a set of lovable characters.

Strawberries is a continuing episode in the life of Oliver, who appeared in Van Dyke's first novel, "Ladies of the Rachmaninoff Eyes."

Oliver tells the story of his 20th summer as he saw it happen. Underlying all the comic byplay is the young man's search for identity in a world centered around Max Rhode, an octogenarian steeped in the field of literature; his lifelong enemy-friend, Orson Valentine; and of all people, the late Gertrude Stein.

Van Dyke fills his pages with a stream of witty remarks in keeping with his unusual set of characters. As the Stein theme develops (too good to reveal), it reminds this reviewer of a scene from an old Keystone Kops movie.

In the end, Oliver, a Negro youth who was willed to Rhode and his wife, from a late relative, comes to understand an earlier question put to his white girl friend: "How do I become a Negro?"

A Genuine Cowboy Tells What Range Life Was Really Like

By DON KEOWN

WILD COW TALES by Ben K. Green; Knopf, 306 pages, $5.95.

WESTERN WORDS by Ramon F. Adams; University of Oklahoma Press, 355 pages, $7.95.

The most romanticized and misrepresented figure in all history may well be the American cowboy.

Thanks to fiction writers, movie makers and now to television producers, the cowboy has emerged as a handsome, clean shaven and colorfully garbed young man who divided his time between singing western tunes, wooing pretty girls and gunning down Indians and desperadoes. As depicted, he had about as much contact with cattle as you or I.

The real cowboy, of course, was handier with a branding iron or rope than he was with a gun. He was more accomplished at swearing than at singing. He was bearded, sweaty and dirty. And generally he was more at home in the company of his horses or a herd of cantankerous steers than he was in human society, including that of comely young women.

"Wild Cow Tales" by Ben K. Green is a book about and by that kind of cowboy.

As a tough and brash young Texan, Green was the genuine article, a working cowpuncher who earned his livelihood on horseback, buying wild cattle "range delivery," then rounding them up from the thorny brush and rugged canyons, and somehow driving them to the nearest shipping point or market. Later he became a veterinarian, practicing that profession in the Southwest in an area that remained horse country long after the few surviving cowboys elsewhere had become mechanized and traded their cow ponies for pickup trucks and jeeps. Now he raises horses and cattle at Cumby, Tex.

Green has already written one book, "Horse Tradin'," that is regarded as something of a classic for its realistic depiction of the Southwest earlier in this century. "Wild Cow Tales" has that same flavor and same value, and like its predecessor, is amusing reading.

The book consists of a series of anecdotes told Texas-style by Green with more humor than modesty of those years when he was engaged in the back-breaking, neck-risking work of flushing outlaw steers from the thickets, after buying them at a fraction of the price of more domesticated beef. One is disappointed by Green's failure to fix more definitely the dates for his stories, but the introduction indicates that most took place in the 1920s and the 1930s when many people thought the era of the cowboy on horseback had ended.

Green's young cockiness is sometimes so downright irritating that one finds oneself rooting for the critters. But it is an honest presentation of how a cowboy went about his work, and his attitude toward it. The cowboy, no sentimentalist, regarded the steer as not only a brute, but as his enemy. And he set out to master it, using his toughness and whatever tactics were required. These sometimes consisted of outright cruelty, and one flinches as Green tells with some pride of sewing shut the eyelids of a couple of uncooperative steers so that he could control them, or of propping open the eyes of another small herd, using wooden pegs lodged in slots he slit into their eyelids.

But it was a hard life, certain to breed hard thinking and hard action from the men who lived it. And other men besides the cowboy have taken it as a personal insult when they have encountered animals contrary enough to resist their efforts to subdue or destroy them.

All that aside, Ben Green has done a service to western history in putting down these authentic recollections from his cowboying days. It was a way of life that left its permanent stamp upon a large section of this country. The importance of the book is indicated by its publisher, Alfred A. Knopf, who seldom bothers with books that are less than exceptionally meritorious.

RAMON F. ADAMS is unchallenged as a bibliographer and lexicographer of the Old West.

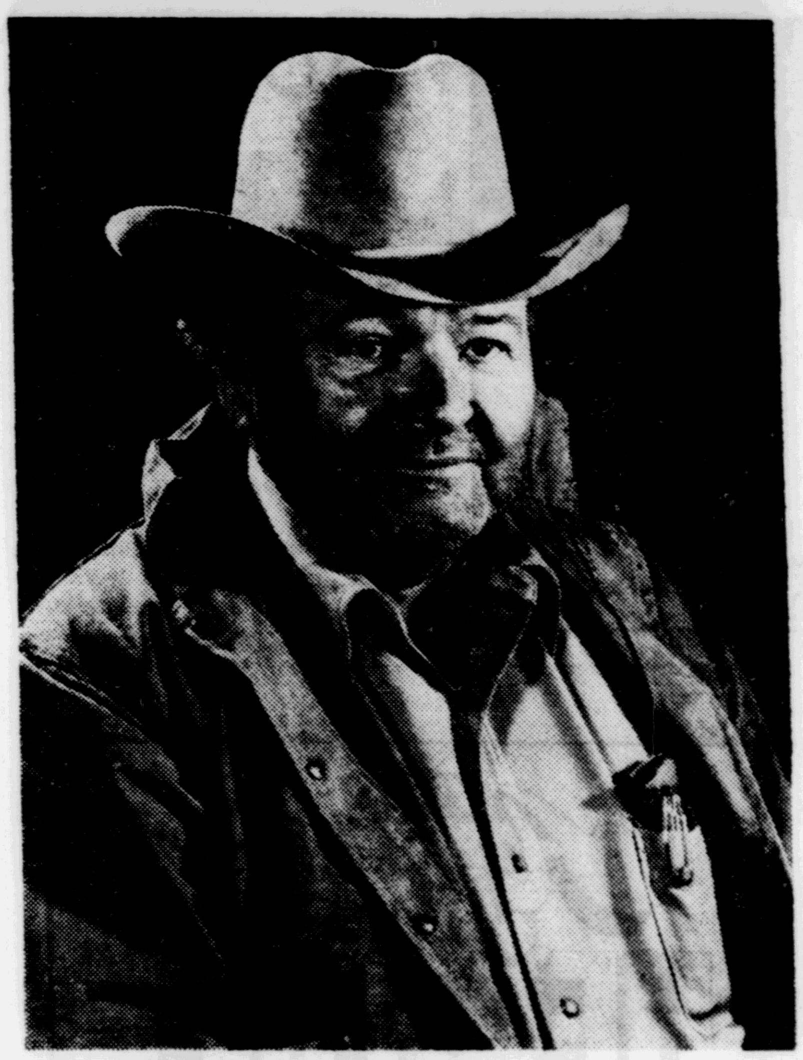
His reputation was firmly established 25 years ago with the publication of his "Western Words: A Dictionary of the Range, Cow Camp, and Trail," and enhanced by later work.

Now "Western Words" has been greatly expanded and published in a new edition by the University of Oklahoma Press to which all students of frontier history and lore are so deeply indebted for so many things.

The expansion consists largely of adding to the cowboy lingo the language and slang of other western occupations — the trapper, the boatman, the miner, the gambler, the railroad builder, the buffalo hunter, the stagecoach driver, the logger, the Indian.

Thus the book now bears a new and shorter subtitle: "A Dictionary of the American West."

While Adams writes with a loose and breezy feel, it is a serious work of immense benefit to writers and students of western Americana. It is also fun reading to run down the meaning of such colorful terms as siwash, fiddle-foot, hunker, sawdust savage, black water, coyoting and tin pants.



BEN K. GREEN is still very much a Texas cattleman, but he reaches back into his younger cowboying days for the tales he recounts in his new book, "Wild Cow Tales."

THE ONLY really effective "textbook" on the journalistic specialty of sportswriting, "How to Cover, Write and Edit Sports" by Louis I. Gelfand and Harry E. Heath Jr., has been updated and published under a new title, "Modern Sportwriting," by the Iowa State University Press.

Now, more than ever, it is an invaluable tool for the aspiring or beginning sportwriter, or for the reporter who covers athletics occasionally. Even the seasoned sports reporter is certain to find much in its pages that will help him to improve his understanding of the games and to better his coverage of them.

Both Gelfand, now public relations director for the Pillsbury Co., and Heath, now director of the Oklahoma State University School of Journalism, have sportswriting backgrounds. They have put an extraordinary amount of effort into their big book, discussing the fundamentals and the intricacies of good newspaper writing, and taking up all the more important sports individually so that their special problems can be accorded due attention.

Examples, both good and bad, of modern-day sportswriting are employed and analyzed generously, and there is also expert discussion of typography, page design and copy editing.

Always, the emphasis is upon serious professional competency in a field that sometimes gives way to slapdash coverage and careless writing. The co-authors stress that no newspaper field offers greater opportunity for the display of ability than do the sports pages.

Priced at $8.50, it is a one-of-its-kind book that should not only be acquired by those entering or considering sportswriting careers, but should then be studied most assiduously. It can be the equal of many a semester course in a university school of journalism.

SOMEONE thinks up the ideas and writes the verses for those greeting cards you see in the stationary stores, drug stores, gift shops, etc. And they get paid for doing so. For those who would like to get in on the act, Writer's Digest has published "The Greeting Card Writer's Handbook," edited by H. Joseph Chadwick and containing the best advice of professionals in the field. It costs $5.95.

Sleuths & Suspense

THE FLAMING MAN by M. E. Chaber; Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 180 pages, $3.95. Reviewed by Don Keown.

Insurance investigator Milo March is definitely one of crime fiction's more entertaining "tough guy" detectives.

Chaber puts him through another fast-paced case. This time March is sent to Los Angeles to investigate the burning of a building in which three men died. The fire occurred at the peak of the ghetto riots, and other buildings were burning all around it. But was this one really touched off by rioters?

Between drinks and violent encounters with a couple of Mafia mobsters, March proceeds to find out.

Hardly memorable as to plot or characters, it is nevertheless an amusing addition to the skein of Milo March novels that have won a considerable following.

Some New Books For Juniors

The "pop-up" book idea has, of course, proven itself with the tykes, and we are seeing more and more of it.

Sometimes, unfortunately, it is used as a gimmick to sell what are otherwise inferior books.

Random House, however, has reversed that trend, and has applied the "pop-up" technique to a new series of books dealing with the better children's classics.

Two new books demonstrate how effectively it works — "Pinocchio" and "Cinderella."

Albert G. Miller, an expert at this sort of thing, has retold the two old tales. Paul Taylor has designed the books. Dave Chambers, Gwen Gordon, John Spencer and Jon Dahlstrom have done the gay, colorful illustrations.

The stories come alive as an entire puppet show leaps from a page, as Pinocchio takes his first steps, as horses and pumpkin coach appear from nowhere.

The $2.95 price tag per book is most reasonable for these well-planned and well-executed entertainment packages.

Some other new books for the juniors:

Robert C. Lee has a lot going for him in his "I Was A Teenage Hero" (McGraw-Hill, $4.95), including sports action, good characterization, problems with which young readers can identify, and best of all, humor. Emmettsville High School has been going downhill athletically because the town has been doing the same population-wise. But the arrival of three husky young triplet brothers brightens the picture. Except that they know nothing about basketball. Johnny Dace sets out to remedy that weakness, and also to put Emmettsville back on the map with the triplets' help. It's a good fun yarn for boys.

"First Nursery Rhymes" (Walck, $1.95) is an exquisitely small, beautifully done booklet for tots. Twenty-three tried-and-true nursery rhymes make up the contents. The delicate artwork, some of it in color, is by Brende Meredity Seymour. It is a little jewel, just right for tiny hands.

BREAKFAST BLUES vanish when a garden view accompanies the bacon, eggs and cereal. This kitchen garden was created by opening the wall with glass and adding a screen of cedar one-by-twos to frame a tiny court. Hardy evergreens and interesting rocks sparkle in the sunshine.

A Refreshing Garden View Sweetens The Breakfast Cereal

Nearly everyone agrees that a good breakfast gets the day off to a swinging start.

But what makes a good breakfast? Is it enough to gulp the regulation vitamin-protein-mineral requirements while flying through the kitchen at a dead run? Or should breakfast time try to live up to its television image?

Okay, no one's kidding anyone. In the average household, there just isn't time for truth and beauty at 7 a.m. Still, a lot of the feeling of hurry could be diminished if the scene were tranquil enough to invite sitting down for an instant.

MAKING THE difference is something to look at besides the cereal box. For instance, a spot of garden alongside the breakfast table does wonders to refresh spirits, and it's not hard to supply.

If there's presently a large window by the breakfast table, half the job's already done. If not, the first step is to provide window space — perhaps with a sliding glass door unit that lets you carry breakfast outdoors on a balmy morning.

The second step is to enclose space for the little garden.

There are two reasons for screening: It frames the garden by providing a backdrop. And it assures privacy in the kitchen — important if you're the breakfast-in-bathrobe type.

THE SCREEN must be tall, of course, to substitute for window shades. But a lacy design of vertical one-by-twos won't seem enclosing and it's easy to build.

Place four-by-four-inch cedar posts at the garden's four corners and connect them with two-by-four rails at top, bottom and center. Then just nail the cedar slats flat over the rails, to the inside or outside, whichever you prefer.

Add a two-by-six-inch cap board for a trim look along the top and finish the screen with semi-transparent stain.

THE GARDEN itself can be used as the main focal point, utterly simple. One tall, fluffy shrub or dwarf tree should do with a few low, hardy evergreens and an interesting rock or two completing the plan. If there's space, a small bench makes a pleasant touch.

Tubbed annuals can be added for summer color and potted herbs can be grown here, too.

Groundcover could be crushed rock, paving stones or squares of wood decking.

Bird-watchers might add feeders and a bird bath to bring breakfast time action to the protected garden.

"What Made The Holes In My Silk Dress?"

Those holes are not from moths or silverfish as you might suspect. Would you believe common table salt? It is. In your dress it appears that food containing salt was spilled on it. The salt went to work on the slender silk threads and when the dress was flexed in the cleaning process, the damage appeared.

The same damage may occur in the underarm areas of a silk garment, caused by the salt in perspiration. Silk and wool trousers, too, find the silk threads damaged from food containing salt or from perspiration.

Silk yarns are strong, but only when the diameter of the yarn is large enough for the purpose for which it is being used. If it is not, ordinary flexing of the garment in wear and at points of strain will result in splits in addition to the damage common salt can cause to silk.

THE HOME WORKSHOP

Some Questions To Be Answered

Starting a home workshop is more than a matter of purchasing the proper tools and then finding some place around the house where you can use them.

Like the golfer who says "I should have . . . " after misplacing a shot, the handyman who hastily puts together a workshop is likely to discover later that some things should have been done differently.

You can avoid regrets by some thoughtful planning.

YOUR FIRST consideration is the location of the work area. The more space at your disposal, the better. But there's more to it than that. You have to ask yourself some questions and, on the basis of the answers, decide what to do.

Here are some of those questions:

Will the probable location have some natural light? While it's always possible to provide all the artificial light you want, you'll find it a lot more pleasant to work where you can get some view of the outside, even if it's only a glimpse of the sky.

WILL THERE be sufficient heat, assuming you live in an area where the winters get fairly cold? If not, will a space heater do the job or will it be necessary to run heating lines into the area?

What about accessibility? Remember that there may be times when you have to move large-sized materials into the workshop. If this will be difficult because of narrow stairs or the necessity of carrying everything through rooms of the house, consider the possibility of placing the shop near a window, as might be the case in a basement.

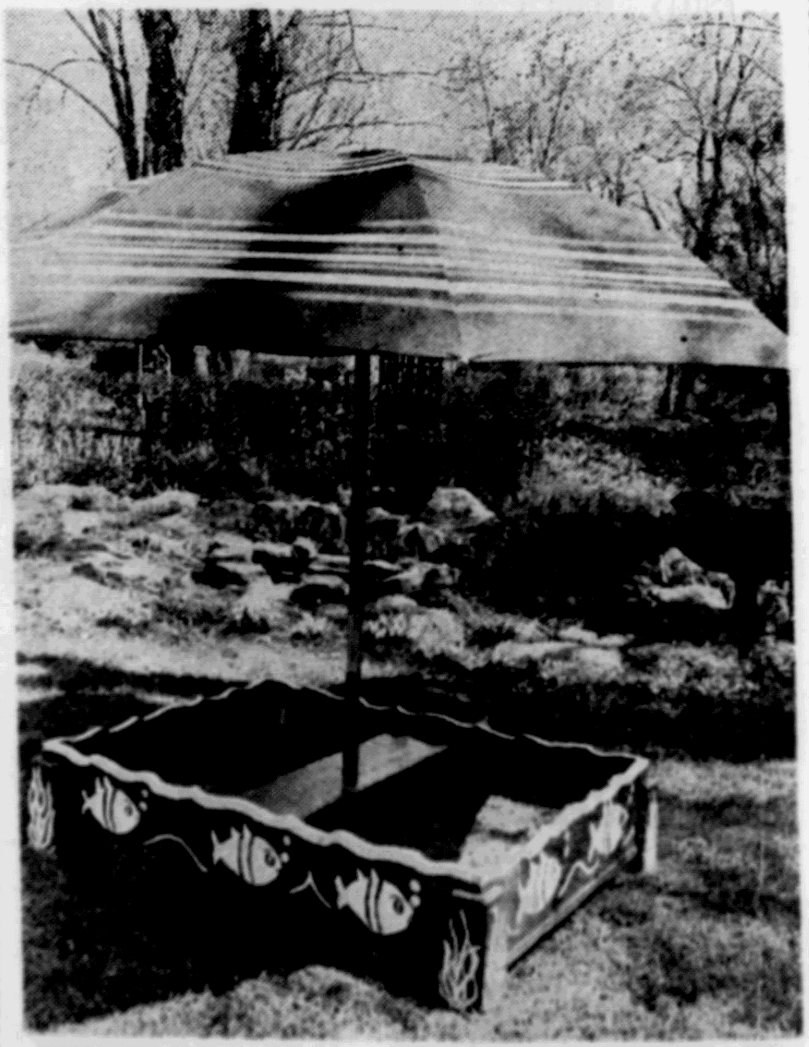
Do you have or will you be able to install electrical outlets in convenient places? The chances are you will have a number of power tools. Will it be necessary to have an extra line to handle the increased electrical load?

WILL THE shop be located where the noise emanating from it will disturb the rest of the house? In a basement, for instance, you might be able to place the work region under a room which isn't likely to be used while you're in the shop. And if you have no choice, what soundproofing measures will be necessary?

Will it be a healthful place in which to spend many hours each week? Continual dampness can affect your body as adversely as it will your metal tools and the wooden materials which you will use. Can the dampness be eliminated?

Will there be enough ventilation? This is especially important if — as is likely — you will be using paints, varnishes, lacquers and other finishing materials, as well as certain kinds of cements and other products that are toxic or flammable.

FUN IN THE SAND



JUST ABOUT every adult's recollections of his childhood include memories of happy hours spent playing in a backyard sandbox. It's still an integral part of the home playground. Dad can build this one with the help of an Easi-Bild pattern. Send 75 cents to Independent-Journal, Post Office Box 215, Briarcliff Manor, N. Y., 10510, and ask for Sandbox Pattern No. 20. The pattern is full-size and complete.

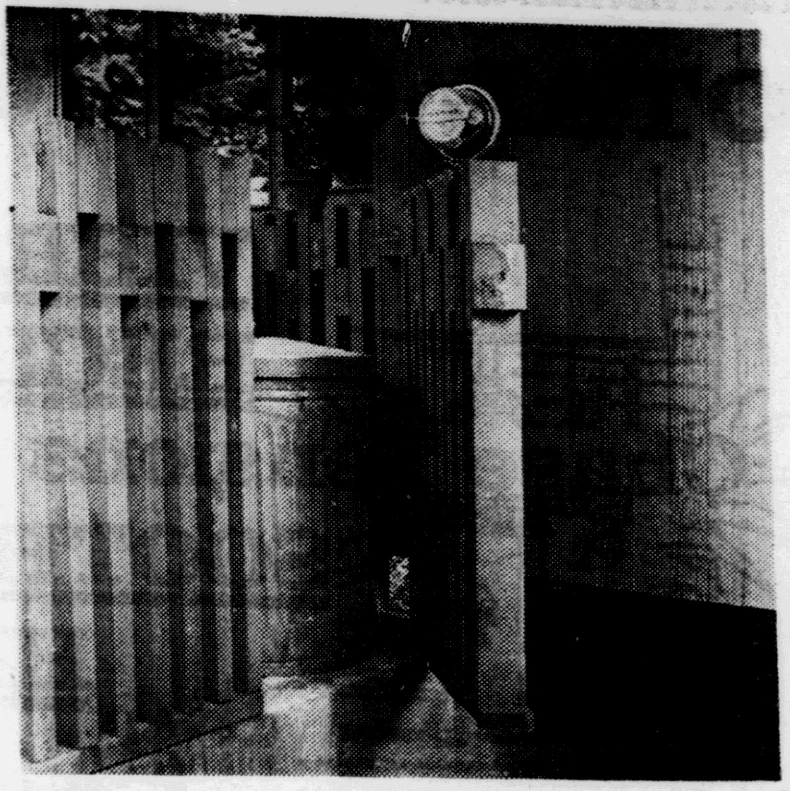
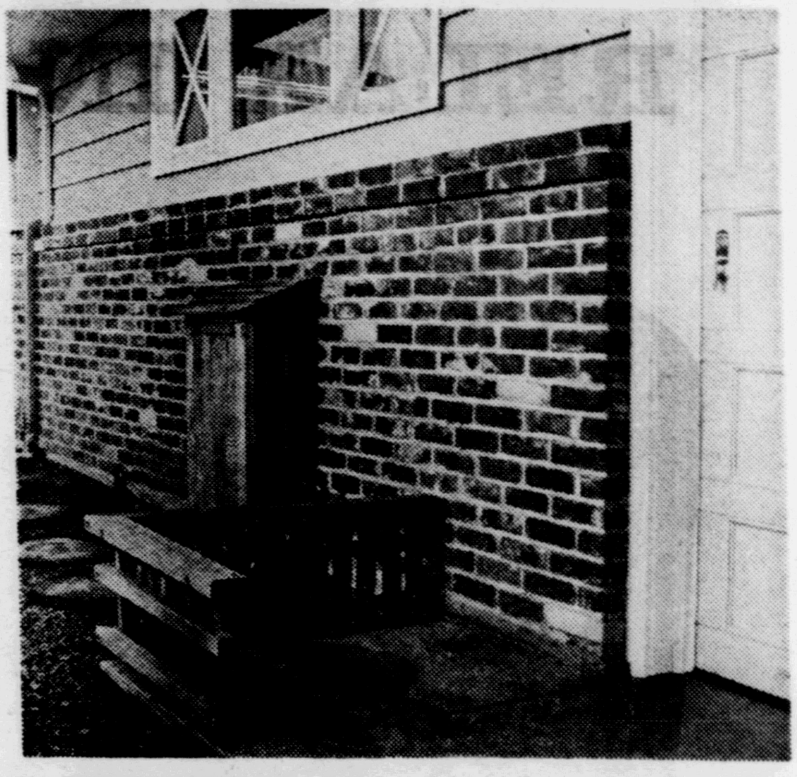
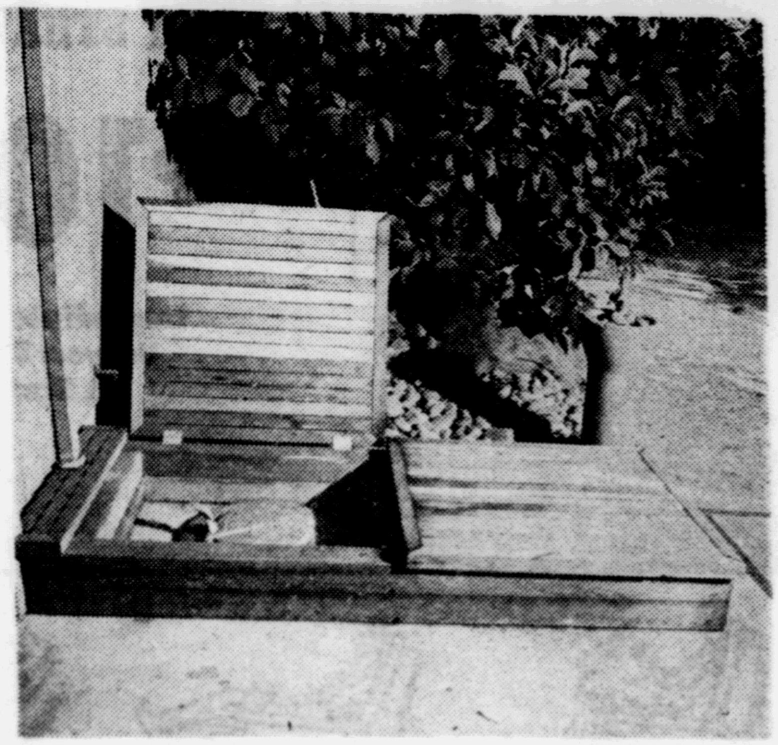
How To Hide The Trash Can



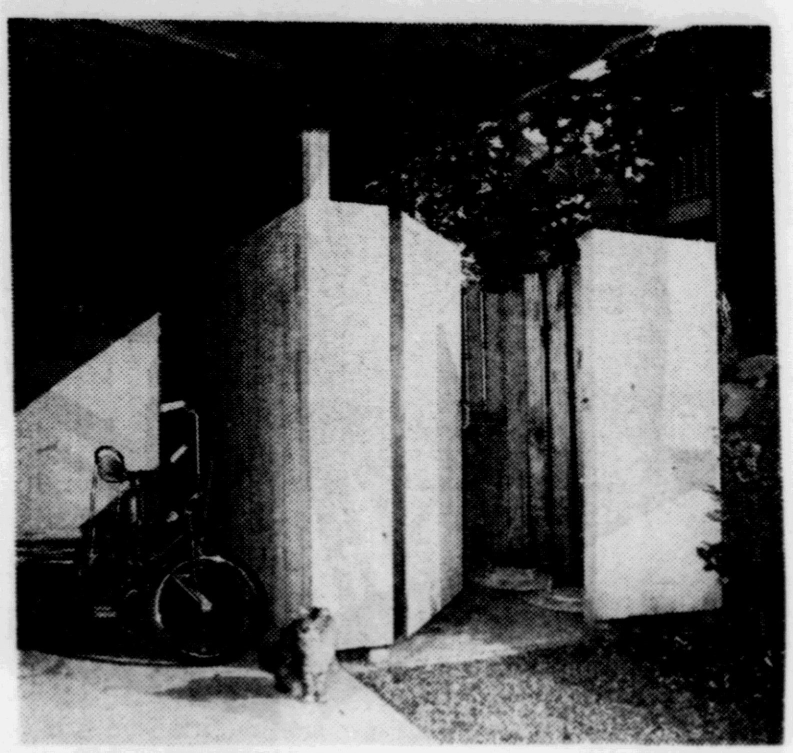
A SCREEN OF vertical two-by-fours conceals the trash can, but is low enough to reach over and deposit garbage. The gate permits easy removal of the can.



BY THE GARAGE entrance, a shin-high screen of two-by-twos hides the sunken can from the street and front walk. Hose and faucet are in miniature shed.



FLIP-TOP COVERS that look like a low bench when closed hide the sunken cans that are located in full view of the patio and swimming pool.



THIS SERVICE AREA, which adjoins the carport at front of the house, has been concealed by a high cedar board fence that matches the siding of the home.

Nobody loves a garbage can. But can you imagine surviving without one?

The trouble is, trash cans aren't very decorative. Keep one handy by the back door and it's going to show. Hide it, and you can't get at it.

Or, at least, that used to be the case.

Today, American ingenuity has come to the rescue with four slick ideas that put the garbage can right where you want it but conceal it, too.

One idea hides sunken cans under a lid. The other three employ a sort of fence to do the trick.

TWO OF THE screening tricks work particularly well when the cans are kept on the street side of the house — a not uncommon situation.

For a sunken can set adjacent to the driveway and kitchen door, a shin-high, L-shaped "fence" built on two sides will effectively conceal the trash can from view. This miniature fence can be slat-style, with two-by-twos nailed vertically to rails of the same material. A two-by-four cap board makes it look extra trim.

The screen can be attached to the house wall and to the paving with right-angle galvanized straps at the corners. The open side should face the driveway, of course.

WHEN A CARPORT is built across the front of the house as part of the main entrance, an enclosed service yard located at the carport's edge is perfect for either sunken or standing trash cans. Full-height walls are needed on three sides, with the back left open for easy access from the house.

A gate should be included in the front wall.

If possible, match the service yard walls and gate to the house siding pattern. Or use one-by-four-inch boards finished to match the house color.

For backyard situations, two ideas are offered.

WHEN THE kitchen door opens directly to the main patio, sunken trash cans by the door can be completely concealed by a low box with hinged lids. Sides of the box can be a pair of flat two-by-fours nailed one on top of the other and bolted to the paving.

Lids can be built with lath stapled to one-by-one-inch framing. Miter corners of the lid frames to get a neat job and lip the lids over the box at the front to provide a hand grip. Use butt hinges to attach them to the box.

To conceal standing cans, all that's needed is a simple screen built about four inches higher than the cans. This screen should enclose the cans on all sides and a gate must be provided for their removal. But to deposit trash, just reach over the top of the screen and lift the can's lid. There's no extra fuss involved.

ANY OF THE four ideas is easy to execute and lends itself readily to design variations. Materials can be western red cedar, Douglas fir, white fir or pine finished with paint or stain.

Place standing cans on a base of sand and gravel so rain water drains away freely.

Pickets Quit At U.C. Gate

BERKELEY (AP) — Unexpected peace has come to the University of California Berkeley campus with the end of a teaching assistants' strike and suspension of activities by striking minority students.

Chancellor Roger Heyns expressed optimism at the sudden turn of events and said, "We have a climate in which we can make more progress on the issues."

However, he stressed that the state of emergency declared by the governor will not be lifted immediately and that police will remain on campus until he is assured "the techniques of violence and vandalism" will not return.

Pickets have blocked campus entrances and demonstrators have smashed windows, damaged equipment and furniture and bombarded police with bottles and rocks.

The Third World Liberation Front, spearhead of th minority students' strike which began Jan. 22, launched the approach to campus peace yesterday. It said that strike activity would be suspended to "reaffirm our commitment to negotiate an orderly settlement to our strike and implement our demands."

Chief among these demands has been creation of an autonomous Third World College.

The American Federation of Teachers Local 1570, then announced it had ended the teaching assistants' strike which began Feb. 18. The AFT local had supported the students' demands, calling for removal of police from the campus and for amnesty for thse strikers arrested or disciplined.

Both groups indicated they felt the stage has been set for eventually reaching their goal of an ethnic studies college.

Chancellor Heyns said his administration would continue working on the issue involving Third World studies. He added he had no conflict with Third World students, that the issues they had raised were important to school officials before the strike began and would continue to be. But he added there would be no accelerated procedures to satisfy their demands.

On March 4 the Academic Senate recommended to Heyns that he appoint a chairman for an interim Ethnic Studies department and suggested this could pave the way for a College of Ethnic Studies."

Conn Hallinan, president of the AFT local, said the union's action had resulted in "substantial gains" but Heyns said the strike "was a complete failure" and any gains were not the result of it.

NEVADA EXECUTION PROTEST

San Francisco Theological Seminary students erect cross at the San Anselmo campus to protest the execution of Lester Morford III, 24, formerly of Santa Rosa, on April 1 in Nevada. The cross was erected Thursday, and the seminarians promised to drag it from Sacramento to Carson City next week on a "pilgrimage of mercy" to seek a stay of the execution for murder. 'Revolution' Stirs College Of Marin

The chaotic student government situation at the College of Marin was even more confused today following a "revolution" yesterday which one side claims swept the current government out of office and the other insisting that nothing of the sort happened.

The apparent upshot of a stormy meeting in the student center was that both the college's student Executive Council and a self-appointed "interim" committee both will meet Monday to consider setting up new elections.

An attempt to get a Superior Court injunction to close down the entire school Monday apparently has been dropped.

"The "revolution" — which one student described as "more of a coup d'etat — occurred during a noisy two-hour meeting in and around the union building called by the militant Third World Liberation Front (TWLF).

The TWLF and other factions on the campus claim the current student government was illegally elected.

The resignation of the student officers was demanded at yesterday's meeting and some officers did quit their posts. Others refused, although the revolting students claimed afterwards that the whole government had been booted out.

Terror Shelling

SAIGON (AP) — Enemy mortars and rockets hit more than 70 allied bases and towns last night and early today and U.S. and South Vietnamese troops drove off two sharp ground attacks northwest of Saigon.

Secret Sessions Hint Progress On State College Peace Efforts

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—A secret meeting between San Francisco State Acting President S. I. Hayakawa and student strike leaders today gave hope that some kind of settlement to the bitter dispute might be near.

None of the parties who attended yesterday's 75-minute closed-door meeting would discuss what happened, but one observer not representing either side commented that the talks "seemed promising to me."

And yesterday afternoon, a faculty spokesman heading a committee also negotiating with the dissident students indicated the committee will meet most of the weekend with them.

The Students for a Democratic Society also called off a rally when the striking Third World Liberation Front declined to participate.

And a final note of optimism came as the Black Students Union decided to postpone a "Black Awareness" mass mobilization scheduled for the weekend. The BSU made it clear, however, that if talks break down, the mobilization is on for next weekend.

Ship Missing Off Mexico

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A 580-foot Liberian ore carrier apparently sank early today in storm-churned waters of the Gulf of Mexico some 140 miles southwest of the mouth of the Mississippi River, the Coast Guard reported today.

Ensign Joseph Goeke, acting public information officer of the Coast Guard here, said the vessel, the Vainqueur, was carrying 34 persons and 20,000 tons of sugar.

He said the ore carrier sent an SOS at midnight and that no later communications had been made with the ship.

Rescue craft reported sighting an oil slick and a small boat with a damaged bow in the area at 7:30 a.m. today, Goeke said.

San Rafael Schools To Repeat Bond Try

$2.1 Million Plea Goes To Voters Again June 10

A $2.1 million school bond issue—a replica of the one defeated only last January—will go before San Rafael voters June 10.

Even with January's bitter defeat still fresh in their minds, San Rafael Board of Education members last night unanimously and without hesitation voted to place the once-scarred issue on the ballot again.

And — depending on board action March 25 — the school district may gamble $40,000 in architect's fees on the outcome of the election.

On March 25, the board will decide whether to authorize the architectural firm to go ahead with preliminary plans of the school which would be built if the bond issue passes.

Board members were told yesterday that if the school were to be ready for the September 1970 session, work on the plans must be started now.

Board members had actually decided last week to place another bond issue before the voters in June, but they used yesterday's meeting to determine the amount to be asked for.

The board members had three basic plans to work from. The $2.1 million figure — which was approved — calls for construction of a middle school which will house 900 students. Or they could have cut the bond issue to $1.8 million by building a smaller school, one which would have housed 600 students. A third proposal was to build the smaller middle school and also cut back on construction programs at existing schools.

The tax increase for the $2.1 million issue is an estimated 10 cents on the present rate of $2.265 per $100 of assessed valuation, Supt. John Plank noted. It would be 8 cents on the $1.8 million bond issue and 7.5 cents on the lowest issue.

The board showed little inclination to seek the lower two figures.

Board chairman Lawrence I. Kramer noted that the difference in the tax increases was 15 per cent, yet taking the lower figure would mean cutting the school size by 33 per cent.

"That's just not good business," he said, "I could hardly recommend that to a client of mine."

The meeting — an adjourned session of the one last week — took only an hour and was carried out before only 12 onlookers, quite a contrast to the 100 or more who showed at the last

Sentinel Shift Gets Support

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Nixon picked up a powerful new congressional ally for his proposed "safeguard" anti-ballistic missile (ABM) system today when Sen. Richard B. Russell, D-Ga., endorsed it.

Russell, dean of the Senate and chairman of the Appropriations Committee which will control funds for the program, said Nixon's plan makes "good sense." He pledged to "support it vigorously and fully."

Meanwhile , evidence continued to indicate that, while the program will produce Nixon's first serious test of support in Congress, opposition to the "safeguard" system was much less intense than the criticism directed at the old Sentinel ABM program.

Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield said changes Nixon made in the ABM go "a good way to meet the objection" from senators.

Mansfield stopped short of endorsing the "safeguard" system, and promised a full examination by the Senate.

Belle Avenue Exit To Shut

The Belle Avenue off-ramp from Highway 101 will be permanently closed Tuesday as excavation work begins on the Ffith and Mission avenues northbound on-ramp, the state Division of Highways announced yesterday.

Highway officials advised motorists who now use the Belle Avenue exit to use the Irwin Street off-ramp instead.

The existing on-ramp on Belle Avenue will remain open until completion of the new on-ramp, highway officials said. They made no estimate of how long that would be.

New Shooting On Russ-China Border Island

MOSCOW (AP)—The second bloody clash in two weeks between Soviet and Red Chinese troops flared today on a disputed little island along their border, sparking a flurry of charges, countercharges and warnings of worse to come.

Moscow and Peking accused each other of starting what both called "armed provocation." and Moscow radio said there was an unspecified number of dead and wounded. The Chinese declared the latest round was "continuing and expanding."

The new incident touched off an exchange of protest notes between the two governments, while Moscow and Peking radio swapped charges.

BORDER ISLAND

Bone of contention was an island in the Ussuri River along the Manchurian border about 200 miles north of Vladivostok. The Russians call it Damansky Island and the Chinese refer to it as Chenpao.

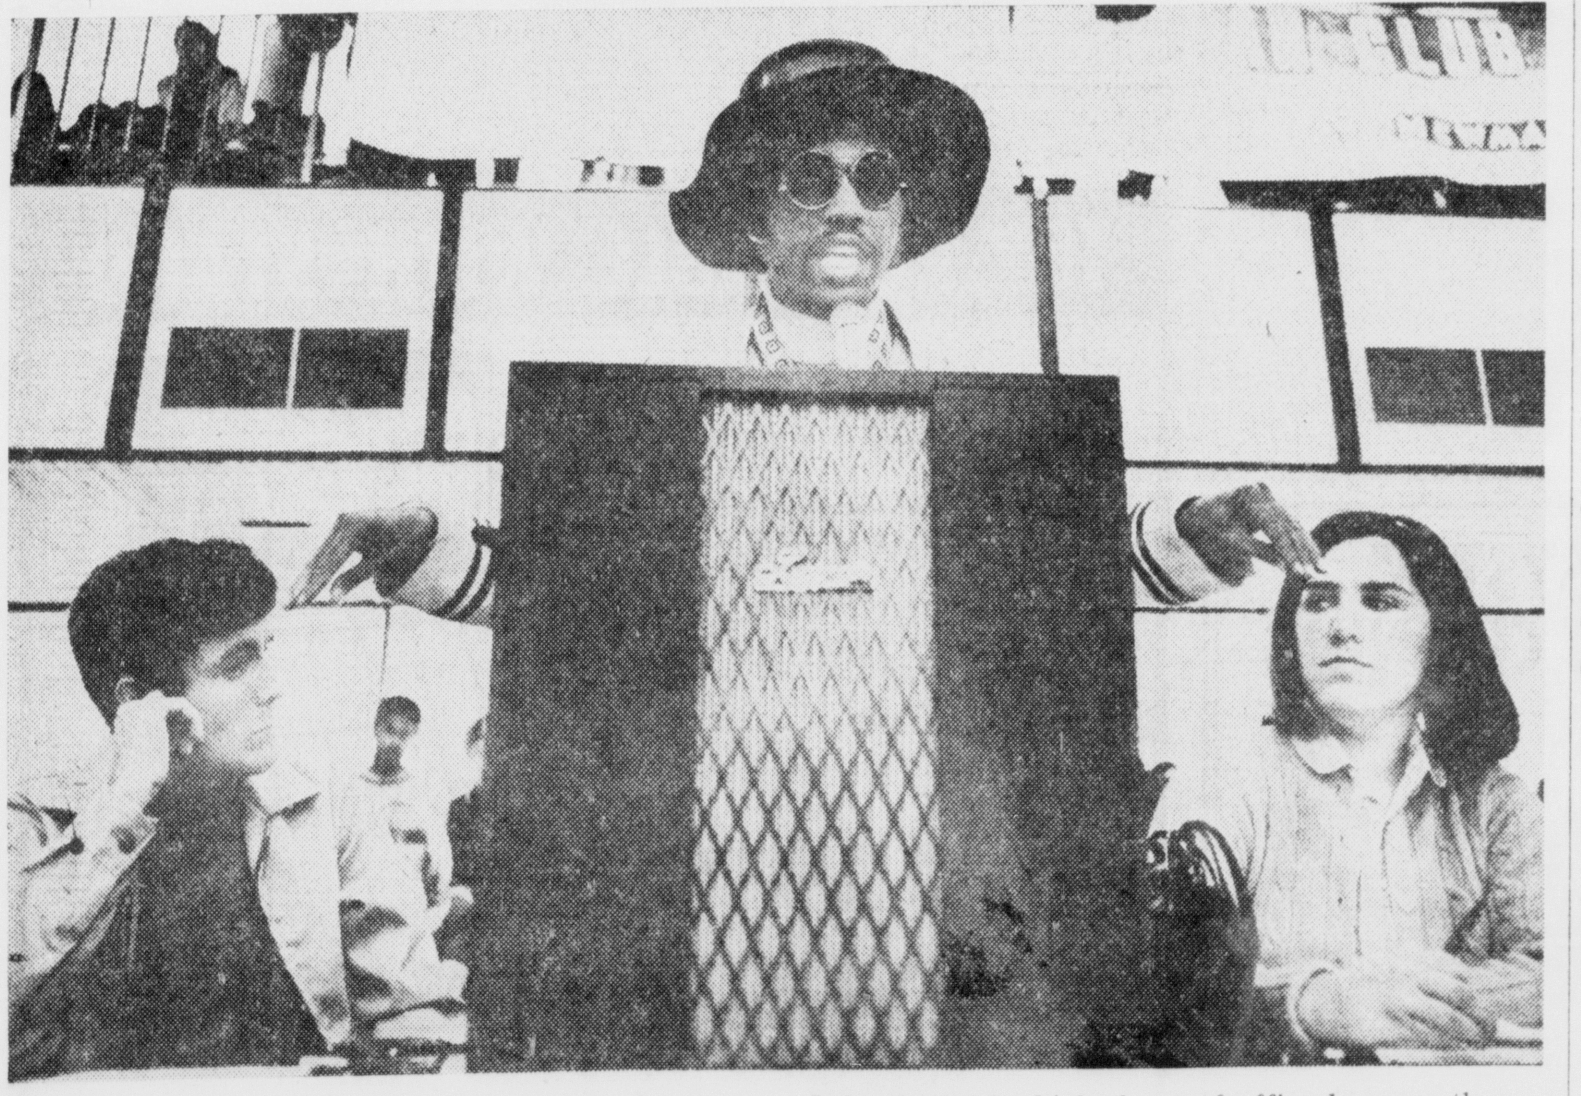
Both nations claim the island, and they clashed over it March 2 in a skirmish which the Russians said left 31 of their soldiers dead. Both warned that the latest incident could have grave consequences, but they gave highly conflicting versions of what happened, as they did two weeks ago.

TWO VERSIONS

For example, Moscow said Chinese troops invaded the Soviet frontier post on the island yesterday and that a Chinese detachment attacked Soviet guards today. The Chinese protest referred only to a clash today and made no reference to the casualties reported by Moscow radio.

The Soviet protest to Peking, distributed by the Soviet news agency Tass, said that today a "big detachment of Chinese soldiers, supported by artillery and mortar fire, attacked Soviet guards who were protecting the island."

Peking radio, in turn, said Russian soldiers supported by a big convoy of armored cars and tanks intruded into Chinese territory near the island today. The broadcast said the Russians attacked and Chinese border patrols were "compelled to shoot back in self-defense.



BSU LEADER — Black Student Union member Conrad Harris II tells College of Marin students that student association acting president Peggie Guthrie (right) and parliamentarian Mike Beyries (left) should be kicked out of office because they and others were illegally elected. Harris ran for president in the March 6 student elections but was declared ineligible.

SPECIAL NEWS FOR MARIN'S GREEN THUMBS

Today's issue of the Marin Magazine in your Independent-Journal is a salute to the spring season that arrives officially next week.

The extra-size magazine is the annual spring gardening edition, filled with helpful hints on plants and planting techniques that should be invaluable to Marin's "green thumb" corps, eager to get outdoors after a rainy winter that has kept them inside.

In addition, Marin Magazine readers will find all the popular regular features in the I-J's weekend supplement.

Dock Workers-Teamsters Split May Idle Vessels

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—A jurisdictional dispute between the Teamsters Union and the International Longshoremens and Warehousemens Union over the loading of containers could close down West Coast waterfront operations Monday.

The dispute, which has been festering for months, is centered on the question of whether teamsters or dockworkers should load containers at loading installations near the docks.

Tim Richardson, head of Teamsters Local 85 said yesterday his union had been informed that ILWU members "will refuse to handle any containers loaded by Teamsters."

Last November the Teamsters Union, which currently does the loading, went on strike against San Francisco piers after the job at one installation was taken from its members and given to a longshorman.

At that time the Pacific Maritime Association, the employer organization, filed unfair labor charges with the National Labor Relations Board and a court order ended the strike pending an inquiry to determine jurisdiction. The study is still under way.

Mutiny Trial Moved To Washington Fort

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)--The mutiny courtmartial of five Presidio GI's will resume next Wednesday—almost 1000 miles away.

The trial was moved from San Francisco to Fort Lewis, Wash., yesterday at the request of the defense lawyers. A massive antiwar demonstration is planned for today on the Marina Green outside the Presdio and the lawyers argued that such activities might cause "a backlash" unfavorable to the accused.

Defense attorney Capt. Joseph Choate said that "no city in the United States is more antiwar or antimilitary than the city of San Francisco.

"Hippies have rallied on the side of the defendants, and who knows: These accused may be found guilty by association."

Presiding law officer Lt. Col. John G. Lee agreed to the change of venue, saying, "I'm just not at all sure they can get a fair trial in this area."

The defendants are among 27 charged with mutiny after a sit-down demonstration by prisoners to protest stockade conditions and the death of another inmate.

Three so far tried in San Francisco got sentences ranging from 14 to 16 years in prison. A fourth won a change of venue to southern California and got only four years for the same offense.

Five are now on trial, one is undergoing psychiatric examination, three have escaped and 14 are awaiting court action.

Lawmakers Ask Prison Jobs Reform

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — A report compiled by the Assembly staff urges that inmates be given paying jobs in private industry because prison work programs are unsuccessful.

The 68 - page report said inmates would be trained for higher paying jobs when they leave prison and could use the money earned while in prison to pay "room and board" and help keep their families off welfare.

"The inmate can only work at blue-collar or menial occupations," said the report released yesterday by Assemblyman W. Craig Biddle, R - Riverside, chairman of the select committee on the administration of justice.

"Even the most motivated inmate cannot, while in prison, engage in any work that would increase his opportunity to enter highly paid occupations upon release," it added.

About $5.6 million — 7 per cent of the current prison budget — would be paid to the state if each of the 3,100 inmates now in work programs paid $5 per day for room and board at the prison.

"If an inmate was considered a good employee while in prison, the firm for whom he worked should be expected to provide employment for him upon his release when an appropriate opening was available," the report said.

SAN QUENTIN

The researchers noted San Quentin used "old and obsolete machinery" to operate its cotton textile mill, Folsom Prison did not use automatic peach pitting equipment in its canning industry and paper production is outmoded.

The report said giving inmates jobs in private firms would eliminate the traditional competition between industry and the government over selling prison made goods.

The products inmates helped make could be sold on the open market.

To avoid a constitutional prohibition against contracting prison labor to private firms the inmates would have to volunteer for the programs.

TAX BREAK

A 50 per cent income tax deduction on plant operation costs for up to 18 months would be given to companies participating in the program. They also would receive a 10 per cent price preference over out-of-state firms on state purchases.

The inmates would be paid the normal prevailing wage, be required to conform to any union regulations and be entitled to all other benefits and programs offered regular employes.

Whales' Death Cause Sought By Scientists

LAGUNA BEACH (AP) — Scientists — including a Marinite — sought today to establish whether the death of six whales washed up on California beaches could be related to the Santa Barbara oil slick.

A black pilot whale, the latest casualty in the past seven weeks, was washed ashore yesterday at Laguna Beach, 140 miles south of Santa Barbara. The other deaths, of larger Pacific gray whales, occurred in Northern California.

Biologists said there seemed to be no connection between the Laguna Beach whale and the oil slick, which once blackened 800 square miles of ocean, killed hundreds of birds and trailed oily splotches over more than 100 miles of coastline.

Only one dead whale normally shows up on state beaches every other year, said Dr. Robert Orr of the California Academy of Science. From 6,000 to 8,000 whales migrate between Baja California and the Arctic this time of year.

Jerry Talbott of the San Francisco Bay Area's Tiburon Marine Laboratories, run by the U.S. Interior Department, said tests should determine if detergents and oil dispersants used to clear the Santa Barbara beaches could have killed the whales.

Blast Rips Schoolrooms In Israeli-Held Gaza

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

A powerful explosion ripped through a school in Israeli-occupied Gaza today, injuring 15 children, two of them seriously. One of the students lost an eye and another suffered severe chest wounds.

The 13 other children received minor injuries but were taken to a hospital for observation.

In another part of the city, students from an Arab girls school stoned passing vehicles on a main road to town in anti-Israeli violence.

The incidents were the latest in a series of disorders in Gaza and Israeli-occupied towns on the west bank of the Jordan River. The cause of the blast was not immediately known.

In Cairo, Egypt vowed today to recapture all its territory lost in the June, 1967, war and "liberate" the Israeli territory of Palestine.

In a statement published today by the semiofficial Cairo newspaper Al Ahram, the government said it was convinced political efforts to resolve the crisis would fail not only "because of Israel's expansionist ambitions but also because America's attitude was meant to deceive."

It also said the Arab "objective is the liberation of Palestine and not merely the liberation of the Sinai" desert seized by Israel during the six-day 1967 war.

In Jerusalem, Israel warned the Arabs that its troops would exercise one of "many options" against Egypt if Egyptian forces continue their artillery and shooting attacks along the Sinai front.

Alioto Tells Views On Campus Fight

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—"Except for the fact that we almost got killed, it was a very profitable trip," Mayor Joseph L. Alioto told an airport news conference yesterday.

The mayor returned home from an East Coast trip during which he was assaulted by radicals during an address at Georgetown University. He said he had suffered "only a glancing blow on the left cheek" during the Thursday night melee.

The radical demonstrators gathered outside the hall where Alioto was to speak to 700 persons and jostled him as he tried to enter. Other students protected the mayor but no police were called to the campus.

The mayor bemoaned the fact that the students assigned to protect him all wore glasses and then seemed unable to see when they took them off.

On a more serious note, he commented, "Direct physical attacks seems to be a new dimension of the SDS." Such violence, he said, was evidence of frustration among SDS members. He also suggested that much of the radicals' action was "drug induced."

The mayor again emphasized that university officials or mayors should not be "squeamish" about using police force to protect the right of free speech.

Sirhan Trial In Recess

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—The trial of Jordanian immigrant Sirhan B. Sirhan for the murder of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy was 10 weeks old today and the end was not in sight.

The trial, which got under way Jan. 7, was in recess yesterday to permit two of Sirhan's three attorneys, Grant B. Cooper and Emile Zola Berman, to attend a bar association meeting at Houston, Tex.

It is scheduled to resume Monday.

Land Duty Next For Bucher?

CORONADO (UPI) — Cmdr. Lloyd M. Bucher, the skipper of the USS Pueblo, is going to be reassigned to shore duty soon but the Navy won't give any specific details.

A spokesman for the Bureau of Navy Personnel made the disclosure of Bucher's immediate future yesterday, one day after the conclusion of a court of inquiry into the capture of the intelligence vessel by North Korea.

The five-admiral court heard from 104 witnesses and accumulated nearly 3,400 pages of testimony. The admirals' findings eventually will be passed through the chain of command to President Nixon.

There also were indications that the other 81 Pueblo survivors were going to have new orders soon although the Navy wouldn't say.

One of the crewmen, John W. Grant Jr., 21, Jay, Maine, told his mother on the telephone Friday night that men would be sent home in "a week or two."

A farewell party is scheduled for the Pueblo crew Monday night.

Shooting In China

HONG KONG (UPI) — Communist border guards opened fire today on a band of people apparently making a dash for freedom from Red China into this British colony, government sources said.

No one made it across. The sources said two persons died in the burst of gunfire at 4:20 a.m. and two others were wounded.

Tools Stolen

A total of $90 worth of tools and paint were taken from the Family Burger Drive-In, 831 Francisco Boulevard, San Rafael, between Monday and Thursday, Benni Veideland of 1539 Lincoln Avenue, San Rafael, reported to police Thursday.

WORLD NEWS IN BRIEF

Guerrilla Held

MIAMI (AP) — A 21-year-old Marine deserter accused of murdering a fellow soldier-of-fortune at a secret Haitian guerrilla camp in the everglades surrendered to sheriff's deputies yesterday.

Charles Smith, 21, a Haitian, gave himself up.

Monroe County Sheriff Robert Brown had issued a wanted-for-murder bulletin for Smith Thursday, accusing him of killing Gerald D. Baker during a live ammunition maneuver Tuesday.

Travel Ban Stays

WASHINGTON (AP) — Travel by Americans to Red China, North Vietnam, North Korea and Cuba will continue to be frowned upon by the State Department — for the next six months at least.

The department's ban on such travel would have expired at midnight tonight if Secretary of State William P. Rogers had not acted yesterday to extend it.

Judy Remarries

LONDON (AP) — Judy Garland married her fourth husband for the second time today to make it legal.

"I feel like a 16-year-old," she said.

Bubbling with excitement, the 46-year-old American singer announced at the end of January she had married Mickey Deans, 35-year old New York discotheque manager, secretly in a Roman Catholic church ceremony Jan. 9.

Today's civil ceremony at Chelsea register office was necessary, she said, because they were married "in the eyes of God, but not in the eyes of the law."

American singer Johnny Ray acted as best man. Deans said he is co-owner of the New York discotheque with Sybil Burton, former wife of movie star Richard Burton.

Parks Damaged

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — Floods and oil seepage have caused at least $700,000 damage to California beaches and parks, Parks and Recreation Director William Penn Mott said yesterday.

Mott told the state Park and Recreation Commission the estimate was of "indentifiable repair work" that must be done to restore the recreational areas.

But he siad damage to the marine life and the natural beauty of the Santa Barbara coast is "impossible to estimate."

The director also reported heavy Sierra snows will probably delay the opening of several mountain parks. He said the record snowpack could damage the areas when it melts.

Post For Fletcher

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former professional football player Art Fletcher, who made an unsuccessful bid to become lieutenant governor of Washington last fall, has been nominated as assistant secretary of labor.

If confirmed by the Senate, Fletcher will be one of the highest ranking Negroes in the Nixon administration.

Emergency Strength

LIVERPOOL, England (AP) — As a four-year-old girl lay screaming, trapped beneath a car, Mrs. Betty Doherty, 35, who weighs 210 pounds, pushed through the crowd and tried to lift the car.

"To my amazement," she said today, "the front right corner of the car came clear off the ground. Then I shouted to someone to grab the child."

The girl, Carmel Graham, is now home after two weeks in a hospital with head injuries. Her father, Frank Graham, says Mrs. Doherty and the other rescuer should get a medal.

A spokesman for Vauxhall Motors, which made the car, said Mrs. Doherty would have been lifting a weight of about 500 pounds.

The Guinness Book of Records says that in 1960 a Mrs. Maxwell Rogers of Tampa, Fla., lifted one end of a 3,600-pound car to extricate her son.

Snubs Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — German leftist student Karl Diettrich Wolff, 26, began his appearance before a Senate subcommittee by calling for Communist victory in Vietnam and ended it by walking out of the hearing.

In between he used obscenties, shouted insults at Chairman Strom Thurmond, R-Sc., and referred to members of the committee as "bandits."

Wolff was cheered on by about 30 youths who accompanied him to the hearing of the Senate internal security subcommittee yesterday.

Flood Easing

LISBON (AP) — The Tagus River was subsiding today after two days of floods in central Portugal, national radio broadcasts said.

Low-Cost Expo

SACRAMENTO (AP) — Officials of the California Exposition and State Fair plan a 19-day minifair this year featuring price attractions of the 1950s and 1960s.

They hope to attract a million customers by offering 5-cent games, 25-cent hot dogs and a top price of 50 cents on "big spectacular rides."

Sailors Protest

TOKYO (AP) — About 700 Japanese fishing boats staged a demonstration at sea today protesting proposed legislation that would make part of Tokyo Bay off limits for fishing.

Small fishing boats, ranging from 2 to 3 tons, held up traffic for about four hours. A spokesman for the fishermen said they would continue their demonstrations until the Japanese parliament turns down the bill.

Murder Charged

AUBURN (AP) — San Mateo importer William G. Nelson, 56, has been booked on suspicion of murder following discovery of the bodies of his wife and son near the family's summer cabin.

Mrs. Betty Nelson, 47, and David, 9, had been missing since last October. Officials said yesterday each had been shot in the head at least twice with a small-caliber weapon.

Nelson also disappeared for a time and was found hysterical hiding in the cabin attic last December.

Venezuela Battle

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Three guerrillas were killed and five wounded in a clash with army forces about 74 miles north of Caracas. One of the dead and some of the wounded were Cubans, military officers said last night.

The group was the same that attempted an assault last Wednesday against the naval base at Turiamo, the officers said. Government casualties were not given.

Eban, Nixon Talk

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israeli Foreign Minister Abba Eban, after three days of talks with Secretary of State William P. Rogers, wrapped up his Washington visit in an hour-long conference with President Nixon at the White House.

They met "in an atmosphere of cordiality" and touched on all "important basic elements" of the Middle East crisis, said presidential secretary Ronald L. Ziegler in declining to give details of the discussion.

Pakistan Toll Up

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — The death toll in mob violence sweeping East Pakistan in the last few days rose to 91 today, informants said, but officials only confirmed 62 deaths in the Jamalpur and Manikganj districts near the capital of Dacca.

Reports said 546 houses were burned down by mobs and police made 48 arrests in Jamalpur district.

Oil Strikers Return

LONG BEACH (AP) — Striking Shell Oil Co. members of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Union voted by a 3-2 margin yesterday to return to their jobs at refineries and plants while contract negotiations continue.

Union officials described the vote by the 2,000 workers "a cease - fire, an opportunity to change the climate of discussions." The other major oil companies have reached accord with the union.

Heart Case Dies

MONTREAL (AP) — Gerald Levesque, 54, the 14th Canadian heart transplant recipient, died yesterday of a cerebral thrombosis that struck him a week ago.

Levesque, who received a new heart last Nov. 29, was the last survivor of nine transplant patients at the Montreal Heart Institute. Three other new heart recipients, one in Montreal and two in Toronto, are still living.

Pueblo Protection Note Went Astray In Red Tape

WASHINGTON (AP) — A National Security Agency message suggesting protection for the USS Pueblo floundered in military channels while the intelligence ship was being sent on its last mission, says a House subcommittee report.

Although the message was directed to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the report says, it never reached them nor any other high command officers.

Rep. Otis G. Pike, D-N.Y., chairman of a House Armed Services subcommittee looking into the Pueblo capture by North Korea, read yesterday what he called a statement of facts. The report came after eight closed sessions by the subcommittee.

The statement said the NSA suggestion for protecting the ship was made on the day the mission was approved. The message, sent over the signature of the NSA director, was drawn up by a staff member and the director did not see it until after the ship was captured.

"The message did not object to sending the Pueblo but said consideration should be given to protecting it," the report said. It noted, however, the agency did not have the responsibility nor authority to question the risk of the mission.

O'Brien refused to approve the March budget for the Associated Students. He ruled that funds of the student government must remain frozen until the state attorney general's suit against the Associated Students is tried some months hence.

Federal judges denied a restraining order which would have halted the first of several scheduled trials next week of an estimated 480 protesters arrested at the college Jan. 23. The protesters claimed their constitutional rights of assembly and speech were denied by college rules against campus assembly.

Nesbitt Crutchfield, treasurer of the Black Student Union at San Francisco State, denied that he attempted to set fire to three parked cars. He said he was cleaning up paint with remover Tuesday when he was arrested. He denied any knowledge about a pair of gloves smelling of gasoline which police say they recovered near the area in which Crutchfield was first questioned. Crutchfield was released on $9,400 bail after being held on attempted arson charges.

Paul McMullen, chairman of the Your Elementary Schools Committee (YES), told the board he and his committee were "strongly in favor of seeking the $2.1 million figure."

The school board made it clear that if the June election fails, it will not try again for awhile, at least.

"If the voters knock this one down in June," board member John C. Pfeiffer commented, "then the citizens are going to have to come and ask us for what they want."

$2 Billion Plan To Bar Pollution

SACRAMENTO (AP — The chairman of the State Water Resources Control Board called yesterday for a water pollution control project in the San Francisco Bay and Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta that would cost an estimated $2 billion.

Kerry W. Mulligan said a regional agency — formed by 12 counties and communities as far away as Sacramento and Stockton — must handle the poblem.

"The problems are too large complex and costly for individual local districts to keep on handling," he said in remarks prepared for the California Water Resources Association.

Mulligan said the bay and delta are confronted with serious problems that cannot wait five, 10 or 15 years for solution.

State Education Board Ignores Birchite Charge

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—The state Board of Education took no action on a charge that the John Birch Society is trying to torpedo the state's sex education in public schools.

The board, which viewed portions of a controversial sex education film series, "Time of Your Life," is expected to act on the program at a meeting next month in Sacramento after committee and staff reports on the program are presented.

In yesterday's meeting, board member Dorman Commons of Fullerton said the John Birch Society's magazine devoted seven and a half pages of its January issue to an alleged Communist plot to undermine American values through sex education.

Commons said the Birch Society is responsible for much of the critical mail the board has received on the program.

"I do not think we should be led astray by the volume of mail," he said. "One thing that impressed me was the quality of the letters we received supporting sex education."

Thomas Harward, a physician from Needles who is vice president of the board, denied the Birch Society is involved.

Thoresen Arms Trial To Begin

FRESNO (AP) — San Francisco socialite William E. Thoresen III is scheduled go to to trial Monday in U.S. District Court in Fresno, nearly two years after Thoresen and his wife, Louise, were charged with illegal possession and transportation of firearms.

Federal authorities raided their fashionable mansion in the Pacific Heights area of San Francisco in April 1967 and found 77 tons of arms and ammunition. Among the weapons were 17 machine guns, nine submachine guns, two 20mm anti-aircraft guns, a bazooka and two cannons.

Four days after the raid Thoreson surrendered, posted $55,000 bail by certified check and began a series of legal maneuvers.

Early last year, a change of venue to Fresno was granted because of what was termed "prejudicial publicity" surrounding the case.

Trolley Crashes Leave 22 Hurt

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—A chain-reaction collision involving three Municipal Railway streetcars yesterday sent 22 persons to the hospital.

All but one was released quickly, however. Joseph Jackson, 53, San Francisco, driver of the rear car in the mishap was held for observation.

Police said the accident occurred when one car stopped for a red light and another stopped safely behind it. Moments later, the third car, operated by Jackson, crunched into the back end of the second, which hit the first.

leaders backed him, the growing number of ABM foes in the Senate opened up with both barrels, bringing an end to the Republican President's 53-day honeymoon with a Democratic-controlled Congress.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, called Nixon's "safeguard" ABM system a "multibillion-dollar boondoggle." Sen. Walter Mondale, D-Minn., called it "a tragic mistake" that would drain money from programs to help the poor.

Senate Democratic Whip Edward M. Kennedy, who has commissioned his own independent scientific study of the ABM, said Nixon had missed a rare opportunity to advance the cause of peace. Kennedy vowed to continue his fight, and California Sen. Alan Cranston also said he would oppose the plan.

Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., said Nixon's decision "opens the door to an escalated arms race." Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., said that as of the moment, he would vote against Nixon's proposal.

Warm Welcome, Cold Weather For Apollo Trio

SPACE CENTER, Houston (UPI)—Cheers and hugs, kisses and tears greeted Apollo 9's proud space pilots yesterday on their return to that "beautiful and welcome" place called home from a 10-day space mission that put a summer moon landing within the nation's grasp.

Astronauts James McDivitt, David R. Scott and Russell L. "Rusty" Schweickart shivered in the raw, wintry wind that blew out of a leaden gray sky as they stepped from a red, white and blue space agency airplane at Ellington Air Force Base.

But the intensity of the welcome they received from wives, children, friends and fellow spacemen warmed their hearts.

The crowd of about 200 persons who waited for the men of Apollo 9 at the air base near the Houston space center started non-stop cheering the moment they landed. A brass band played martial music in the background.

Stolen Property Charge Lodged

William Arthur Maas, 44, of 737 Francisco Boulevard, San Rafael, was booked into Marin County Jail today on suspicion of possession of stolen property after he was stopped by police on a traffic charge.

San Rafael police said the license plates on Maas' car did not match and the rear plate turned out to be from a trailer stolen about two weeks ago in San Rafael.

Maas was held in lieu of $500 bail to appear Monday in Marin Municipal Court.

Black Point Club To Oppose Oil Tests

The Black Point Improvement Club agreed last night to send representatives to the next meeting of the State Lands Commission in Sacramento when the commission is expected to make a decision on oil and gas drilling in San Pablo Bay, Mrs. Edna Nolan, club treasurer, reported.

Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Miller were appointed to attend the meeting at 10 a.m. April 1, Mrs. Nolan said.

Astronauts Due Brief Lunar Visit

By SCIENCE SERVICE

Their exhaustive training notwithstanding, it will inevitably be with reluctance that the first astronauts on the moon turn from staring at the awesome expanse of barren rock with the earth suspended above, to the business at hand—the study and sampling of the lunar surface and environment.

These men will probably be the crew of Apollo 11, as yet unselected, who could reach the moon as early as July. How they will spend their precious time on another world is being planned down to the minute by the space agency, which is even mapping their footsteps in an effort to make the most of the few hours allotted to the climax of man's centuries-old lust for the moon.

The plan has been changed dozens of times in the past and will probably be changed several more. The latest schedule, however, gives the two astronauts just 22 hours on the new frontier, while the envious third man waits in orbit aboard the command module.

The Apollo 11 astronauts' first surface task — it would be their choice even with no official schedules — will be to make sure that the spidery lunar module spacecraft, their only link with home, survived the landing intact. At this, including a brief respite for a meal if excitement lets them eat, they will spend three and a half valuable hours.

The next item, incredibly, is eight hours of sleep. The fact that the first men on the moon may feel somewhat other than sleepy ("I might as well have been standing on my head on top of a flagpole, as far as going to sleep was concerned," said Astronaut Donn Eisele of his first night abourd Apollo 7) has not escaped the space agency, which plans to provide sleeping pills.

The snooze is necessary, the agency believes, to ensure that the crew will be alert for the rigors of walking in the moon's alien, one-sixth-normal gravity, and for the painstaking preparations for departure.

With their surface time more than half gone, the astronauts will at last begin preparing to leave the spacecraft and put their own feet on the moon. From various lockers and compartments, they will collect several hermetically sealable sample containers, along with specialized tools for gathering pieces of the lunar rock. A long-handled scoop and a pair of extended tongs will enable the astronauts to pick up surface samples without having to bend too far over in their cumbersome space suits. Several small cylinders, called drive tubes, can be stuck into the ground to collect samples from a foot or more below the surface.

Then both men will don their EVA space suits, designed to provide extra protection from micrometeorites and radiation during Extra-Vehicular Activity, and at last they will unpack a group of scientific experiments, to be deployed on the lunar surface. This, for many who can see beyond the adventure, is the real point of the space program — even if it takes a back seat in both headlines and budgets.

The first astronauts on the moon will deploy three pieces of equipment, all within some 30 feet of the spacecraft.

The first is a seismometer, designed at Columbia University's Lamont Geological Laboratory to detect tiny tremors in the lunar depths and report them by radio to earth.

All the astronauts will have to do with the 100-pound device (which will weigh barely 17 pounds on the moon) is set it on the ground, open the solar panels which power the transmitter and align them to face the sun.

Scientists on earth will play an active part in using the second instrument, a multiple corner reflector at which they will shine the narrow beam of a laser, precisely timing the return signal to measure more accurately the distance from the earth to the moon. Last January, a team of researchers from five universities and two Federal agencies, headed by Dr. Carroll O. Alley of the University of Maryland, demonstrated the necessary aiming accuracy by shining laser beams moonward where they were photographed by Surveyor 7.

Besides Dr. Alley's group, other researchers planning to point lasers at the device include scientists at the U.S. Air Force, and in France and the Soviet Union. Both U.S. and Soviet scientists have bounced laser light off the moon in the past. Without the benefit of reflectors however, the moon's curvature so dispersed the light that returning signals were extremely weak and difficult to time.

The laser beam at first will be sent through the 60-inch telescope now being built for the University of Michigan's observatory on Hawaii; use of lasers at separated points could provide information on continental drift and possibly shifting of the earth's crust. Other studies that could benefit from the lunar laser reflector, Dr. Alley says, include measurements of the mass distribution, size, orbit and vibrations of the moon, as well as the earth's rotation rate and the cyclic wandering of its poles called Chandler's wobble.

The last experiment is a mission planner's dream, not only easy to set up, but weighing on the moon, less than three ounces. Designed by Dr. Johannes Geiss of the University of Berne, Switzerland, the first foreign scientist to have an experiment included on Apollo, it is a piece of aluminum foil, one foot by three, unrolled by the astronaut like a window shade and held upright on a telescoping stand. Aimed directly at the sun, the foil screen is intended to trap particles of the noble gases (helium, neon, argon, krypton and xenon) in the solar wind.

Driven at the solar wind's velocity of more than a million miles per hour, says Geiss, the particles should be embedded several hundred atomic layers deep in the foil. Rolled up again, the foil will be brought back to earth by the astronauts, where Dr. Geiss will melt it down, then measure the tiny amounts of trapped gas particles.

With all three experiments to be deployed within 30 feet from the spacecraft, the astronauts may not have time to get much farther away than that for sample-gathering. Some of the 135 scientists in nine countries waiting on earth for their NASA-allotted share of lunar rock are concerned that this may mean that all the samples brought back will have been contaminated by the spacecraft's exhaust during its descent. The space agency admits the possibility.

Once back in the lunar module, the two astronauts will spend the rest of their 22 hours checking out the vehicle's readiness for the ascent to rendezvous in orbit with the command module. Then it's back to earth.

Monday Is The Day Whole Universe Becomes Irish

By ED DENNEHY

St. Patrick died in Ireland in the year 461 but he's still making miracles!

Annually, on March 17, he transforms thousands and thousands of Americans into instant Irishmen. Italians, Poles, Spanish and Swedes, Protestants and Jews — many people of all races and creeds don Kelly green ties or green carnations to become Gaels for a day.

There's a green-hued spirit of brotherhood across the land as the Romanos, Sadowskis, and the Cohens step along briskly with the O'Briens, Kellehers and Murphys in the traditional parades. The skirl of bagpipes and the lively strains of Irish music sets them all tingling — Celts and temporary Celts alike.

What manner of man spawned this Irish Mardi Gras?

Historians write that Patrick, who gave Christianity a firm foothold in Pagan Ireland, was deeply religious and was a man of action. He possessed determination, qualities that were a must for his missionary work among the feuding Irish kings and clan chiefs of those boisterous days.

Stories of Patrick's exploits have come down through the years. Some are true. Some are legend.

Here is how he made an impression on Laoghaire, a Druid king.

A pagan festival was being held at the famed Hill of Tara. No fire was to be kindled until the royal fire had been lit. It was the night before Easter. Partrick lit the Paschal fire on the neighboring hill of Slane before Laoghaire's bonfire was ignited. The pagan king apparently took Patrick's challenge in stride. They became friends and the king put the saint under his protection although he did not embrace Christianity at that time.

The Christian missionary figured in another potentially dangerous incident in pagain Irish territory. He is reported to have knocked down a noted idol known as Cromm Cruaich, located on a plain in County Cavan. It has been a magnet of Irish for miles around that district.

It's ironic that most of Patrick's work of implanting the Christian faith took place in Northern Ireland, the scene now of strife among Protestants and Catholics. Patrick established his bishopric in Armagh in Northern Ireland in the fifth century. He preached and built churches in Northern areas and traveled frequently to Southern Ireland to spread the teachings of Christ.

In addition to his frequent trips around Ulster, historians find that he visited nearly every part of the green island during his 30 years as a bishop. References to sections that include the Shannon River, Cork, Dublin and other well-known areas occur in ancient writings.

Italians who are helping the Irish to celebrate this year have a special interest. Patrick was an Italian born in Britain. His real name was Magonus Sucatus Patricius. His father was a provincial official in Britain, then part of the Roman Empire.

Patrick born in Britain?

That gives the British a reason to help make Monday a great day for the Irish!

Horse Owner Accused Of Misdemeanor

Criminal charges were filed yesterday in Marin Municipal Court against Edward K. Wachsman, former member of the Marin County Planning Commission, whose neighbors on Palm Avenue in San Rafael are offended by his horses.

Wachsman pleaded innocent to misdemeanor charges of keeping horses without a permit and refusing to remove a public nuisance, and a jury trial was set for March 27 in Municipal Court.

Wachsman's attorney, Michael Dufficy, who is also a neighbor of the defendant, said that he and other neighbors are ready to testify that the horses do not bother them.

Complaints about the horses, in the Dominican section of San Rafael, were brought to the San Rafael City Council in December by neighbors, who said that Wachsman was not complying with an order to clean the horse area daily.

Dufficy said yesterday that a permit to keep horses was taken from his client by city authorities "arbitrarily."

Teen-Agers Cited For Vandalism

Marin juvenile officers reported yesterday that two Santa Venetia teen-aged boys have been cited to the probation department in connection with a wave of vandalism and a burglary in February in Santa Venetia.

The youths are Wesley Lee Sant of 44 North San Pedro Road and Mark Laufer, 17, of 2 Adrian Way, officers said.

They were accused of tire slashing, painting cars and stores and burglarizing the Ferrari stationery store on Feb. 26.

Busher Successor On Board Agenda

Marin County Board of Supervisors will meet in closed session during their all-day meeting Tuesday to consider the appointment of a successor to Probation Officer Walter H. Busher, who plans to retire by June 30.

Re request for an immediate replacement came from Juvenile court Judge Samuel W. Gardiner. The Marin Juvenile Justice Commission, headed by Rex T. Silvernale, also urged an early appointment.

Busher said yesterday he will leave before June 30, "but how much ealier I cant's say."

Busher, a Marin probation officer for more than 17 years, is paid $1,481 per month. When he announced his resignation on Jan. 6, he said he disagreed with some of the policies of the juvenile court judge.

County Administrator Alan Bruce announced last month that he planned to recruit for candidates statewide, have them screened, and then make his recommendation to the county board of supervisors. The recruiting has not yet begun.

Two men have publicly indicated interest in the job. They are John Wesley Brewer of Kentfield, member of the California Youth Authority whose term expires today, and Leo F. Shepherd, a program administrator at San Quentin Prison.

Both appeared before the juvenile justice commission on Wednesday to seek the job.

The supervisors are scheduled to consider the appointment at 4:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Marin Jury Finds Slayer Sane Enough To Execute

A jury of eight women and four men in Marin Superior Court decided yesterday that condemned San Quentin inmate Gerald A. Beivelman is sane enough to die.

The jury made the decision after two and a half days of testimony by psychiatrists and three hours of deliberation.

Beivelman, 30, convicted of the hammer slaying of a woman liquor store owner, was brought before the court on a petition by San Quentin Warden Louis S. Nelson to determine his sanity.

The law provides that a man must be same enough to understand that he is to be executed and for what crime. Beivelman is scheduled to die in the gas chamber April 16.

Prior to making their decision, jurors had listened to five psychiatrists, all of whom testified that Beivelman is psychotic to one extent or another.

Two Vacaville psychiatrists said yesterday that Beivelman, when they last examined him on March 5, had improved since a previous examination of Feb. 5.

Throughout the trial the condemned man sat with downcast eyes, seemingly unhearing. He spoke only twice during the proceedings, once to ask a juror if he thought an "insane man ought to be executed."

Bagley Predicts No Drilling In San Pablo Bay

The state Lands Commission probably will not allow oil and gas drilling in San Pablo Bay, in the opinion of Assemblyman William T. Bagley, R-San Rafael.

"It is my belief and hope that in view of the opposition — coupled with the disastrous Santa Barbara channel mess — that the commission will vote against permitting oil and gas drilling in San Pablo Bay," wrote Bagley.

The letter, addressed to Supervisor Chairman John F. McInnis, arrived yesterday. It was in reply to a letter sent by McInnis, putting Marin on record as opposed to drilling operations in the Bay.

The state Lands Commission will meet at 10 a.m. April 1 in Room 2170 of the State Capitol to decide.

Firemen Plan Drive For Hazards Cleanup

A committee of the Marin County Fire Prevention Officers Association met yesterday in Sausalito to plan an April spring cleaning campaign and future publicity to advise Marin residents on cleaning up or burning their garden debris this season before the backyard burning ban takes effect in December.

The committee's recommendations will be presented to the Marin County Fire Chiefs Association March 26, Sausalito Fire Capt. Ralph K. Pedersen said.

Youths Booked In Vandal Probe

Two teen-age boys have been cited to the Marin County Probation Department on suspicion of burglaries and vandalism at three schools in Santa Venetia after a neighbor noticed earphones stolen from the schools hidden under a rock.

Linked to burglaries at MacPhail, Las Gallinas and Santa Venetia schools were David Leon Wagoner, 16, of 10 La Brea Way, and Mark Christopher Ward, 14, of 65 Granada Drive, Corte Madera.

Juvenile officers said the youths had taken earphones and radios from the schools and done minor damage.

Sausalito Aide Ridicules Dr. Hayakawa

Sausalito appears to have hired a budding editor to be director of its teen center at Star of the Sea Church.

City Mgr. George M. Patterson recently announced hiring of Richard Paris, 23, of Fairfax, a graduate student and part-time teaching assistant at San Francisco State College, for the part-time job of directing the center.

On sale on the San Francisco State campus this week was a booklet, "The Sayings of Chairman Hayawaka," quoting Acting President S. I. Hayakawa —in and out of context — in an effort to make him look ridiculous.

The booklet, illustrated with cartoons by Roberta Christiansen, was edited by Richard Paris and Janet Brown, according to its inside cover. It carries the notice: "The money collected from the sale of this book will go toward bail bond, fines, legal defense aid, and AFT Local 1928 strike fund."

Local 1928 is the American Federation of Teachers local for teaching assistants at San Francisco State. It is on strike avowedly in support of demands of the Third World Liberation Front at the college.

(Richard Paris, the editor and recreation director, is not to be confused with Richard J. Paris of San Rafael, former Marin County probation officer who is scheduled to go on trial April 7 on marijuana and statutory rape charges.)

San Marin High Holds Runoff Vote

Carla Clements has won the position of junior class secretary at San Marin High School in Novato over Sue Dennis in a runoff election, according to student advisor Donald Nicholas.

The vote on Wednesday was so close that a runoff was required on Thursday. The results were announced yeasterday, although no vote was provided.

Mexican Restaurant's Building Too Far South

Tiajuana Tacos will have to move its building 16 feet to the north because it is not in the proper location, the Novato Plan Review Committee decided yesterday. Asst. Planning Director Warren Baker said, the restaurant had an approved plan for the building on Seventh Street, with the location clearly set on the lot. But when the foundation forms were set, the city measured and found that the building was too close to Novato Creek on the south, Baker said.

"We do not know who made the mistake, but the building is 16 feet south of its proper location, so the plumbing and foundation forms must be moved north," he said.

The Novato Plan Review Committee also:

SIGN — Approved a nonilluminated 32-square-foot sign for Stan's Ceramics at 813 Grant Avenue.

CHURCH — Approved the location of a church building for the Church of Christ at 1915 Novato Boulevard, but postponed until its March 28 meeting consideration of plans for the building.

POSTPONED — Postponed until March 28 consideration of a 49-unit apartment for Loyal Davis on the east side of Railroad Avenue south of Orange Avenue, and a request for an awning in front of the Camillo Restaurant at 5398 Redwood Highway for Camillo Magnisi.

Call Issued On Minority Housing

The Mill Valley Himan Rights Commission has issued a call for housing for low income or minority group famileies in Mill Valley, according to commission Chairman Roger J. Fleischmann.

In particular, Fleischmann said, the commission is asking persons interested in locating available housing to contact him.

The commission, meeting Thursday night, also agreed to meet twice a month on the first and third Thursdays at 8 p.m. beginning in April, Fleischmann said.

Speaker Is Set For Fifth In Lenten Series

Christina Baldwin, peace intern with the American Friends Service Committee, will discuss "Developing Strategy in the Quest for Peace" at the fifth in a series of ecumenical seminars at 7:45 p.m. Thursday at the Mill Valley Methodist Church, Sycamore Avenue at Camino Alto.

Miss Baldwin, 22, is a graduate of Macalester College in St. Paul, Minn., and works with the American Friends Service Committee on a full-time basis.

The center seminars, sponsored by five Southern Marin churches, are based on the theme, "Developing Strategies for Today's Social Dilemmas."

Film On Hunger To Be Featured At Church Rites

"Hunger In America," a CBS television documentary, will be shown during both the 9:15 and 11 a.m. services tomorrow at Faith Lutheran Church in Terra Linda.

According to Mrs. Ron Hicks of Santa Venetia, co-ordinator of the morning's activities, the 54-minute film will serve as a springboard to the question, "What Con I Do To Fight Hunger?"

Displays from organizations including the Mississippi Box Project and Meals For Millions will be featured, and a coffee and discussion period will follow the 9:15 a.m. showing.

Faith Lutheran Church is at 355 Los Ranchitos Road.

Group Will Not Press For Fee To Be Waived

The Marin Deputy Sheriff's Association will not press for a waiver of the $300 fee to sponsor a circus in June.

The association on Tuesday requested a fee waiver, but the Marin County Board of Supervisors postponed a decision and asked for more information on the circus.

Francelle Warner, assistant clerk for the board of supervisors, said that Raymond F. Barton, co-chairman of the association's circus committee, came in to pay the $300 fee. Barton also wrote to supervisors, merely asking for permission to put the Rudy Bros. Circus at Marin Catholic High School in Kentfield on two days, June 21 and 22.

Apartment Occupants Suffer Clothes Theft

She told police that she was missing a $22.95 shirt while Diane Smith of the same address was missing seven to 10 shirts valued at more than $50.

Peninsula Woman Denies Check Counts

Pleas of not guilty and not guilty for reason of insanity were entered yesterday in Marin Muncipal Court by Trish Jeanne Dutra, of East Palo Alto, who is accused of writing six bad checks during February.

A preliminary hearing was set for April 11.

Students Try To Stall Draft For Teacher

By JERRY MEGAHAN

Terra Linda High School students have collected more than 1,000 signatures on a petition in an effort to save one of their teachers from the draft.

The teacher, David Dwight, 24, says he is overwhelmed by the gesture, which is the brain child of seniors Steve Glicksman and Jay and Mark Avner.

"I'm flattered that students think so much of me that they would go to all this trouble to help me keep my job," said Dwight, who has passed his physical and probably will be inducted in April.

Principal Frank Stocking and Supt. John F. Plank have written letters to Dwight's Los Angeles draft board asking that he be deferred at least until the end of the school year.

"The petition got started when we heard that Mr. Dwight had passed his physical," said Mark Avner. "We were wondering what we could do to help. The petition was mainly Steve's idea."

In addition to the students, the petition also has been signed by 25 teachers, according to Clicksman.

SENATORS WIRED

One student didn't think the petition was enough. Martin Lawler sent telegrams to U.S. Sens. George Murphy and Alan Cranston and Rep. William S. Mailliard, R-Seventh District.

"Last night he got a reply from Senator Murphy saying that if the Los Angeles board would not postpone his induction until the end of the school year that we should be sure and let him know," Glicksman said. "That makes us a little more optimistic."

Dwight, the school's only psychology teacher, teaches four psychology classes and a math class in addition to functioning as an assistant track coach. He also chaperones most school functions and is in charge of an Explorer Scout Troop.

'MORE VALUABLE'

"We feel that Mr. Dwight is doing more valuable work here than he would be in the Army," said Mark Avner. "We feel he's deserving of our help."

The students may let the petition circulate one more day before sending it off to the draft board "before it's too late," Mark said.

"If I get deferred until the end of the school year," said Dwight, "the bulk of the credit would have to go to the students."

Youths Injured In Auto Crash

Three Petaluma teen-agers were injured Thursday at 2:30 p.m. in a two-car accident on Chileno Valley Road, near Petaluma-Marshall Road, five miles west of Petaluma, the California Highway Patrol reported yesterday.

Treated at Hillcrest Hospital for cuts and bruises were Alexander F. Bentley, 18, of 4669 Chileno Valley Road; Terry Blair, 15, of 7 Graylawn Avenue, and Robin Barcisco, 15, of 4291 Chileno Valley Road.

The highway patrol said the car driven by Bentley struck the rear of one driven by John J. House, 296 Wetmore Lane, Petaluma.

Big Parcel Of Sausalito Land Is Sold

Sausalito Properties has sold another big hunk of its Sausalito waterfront holdings to Sam Zakessian, Sausalito and San Francisco restaurant owner.

Deeds of sale for more than five acres of the prime waterfront land were recorded in the Marin County Recorder's office Thursday morning, bringing Zakessian's Sausalito waterfront holdings up to approximately 10 acres.

Two of the parcels, some .77 acres of filled land bounded by Bridgeway and Humboldt avenues and Locust and Litho streets, were sold to the Jolly Friars, Inc., a San Francisco restaurant chain in which Zakessian is a major partner.

Sale price for the property was not listed and the buyers requested that the documentary transfer tax stamps, which indicate sale price, not be affixed to the deeds until they are mailed, a recorder's office representative said.

DEED OF TRUST

A deed of trust of $56,000 for the two parcels was filed with the deed. The parcels have a fair market value of $69,000, according to the Marin County Assessor's office.

The other two parcels, both underwater blocks directly west of Zacks by the Bay, Zakessian's Sausalito restaurant, were sold to Zakessian himself. A deed of trust for $74,000 was recorded with the deed of sale.

One block, bounded by Humboldt and Donahue avenues and Pine and Turney streets, has a total fair market value of $77,000 including improvements which consist of houseboat apartments.

The other block, also 2.2 acres, bounded by Donahue and Railroad avenues and Pine and Turney streets, has a fair market value of $17,750.

Zakessian was unavailable for comment yesterday as to his plans for the property.

UNDERWATER BLOCKS

In September, Sausalito Properties sold two underwater blocks between Locust and Litho streets and Humboldt and Railroad avenues to Zakessian.

Four other blocks were sold to the Sausalito Yacht Harbor and the JHM Corp., headed by J. Herbert Madden, in December. Other partners in the corporation are Prentice Cobb Hale and John Metcalf, both San Franciscans.

Sausalito Properties still retains control of four blocks north of Litho Street between Humboldt and Railroad avenues and two blocks between Turney and Locust streets and Humboldt and Railroad avenues where the Sausalito boat yard is located.

Alexander M. Young, partner in Sausalito Properties, has said the corporation plans to retain ownership of the boat yard property but hopes to sell the other four blocks as soon as possible.

Sausalito Properties, headed by Young, E. Elmore Hutchinson and the late John Lord King, purchased the property in the early 1960s with plans to fill the land and develop it into a commercial residential area of waterfront hotels, motels, apartments and shops.

The City of Sausalito turned down the plans in 1964 and enacted a moratorium on bay fill within the city limits to prevent Sausalito Properties from filling the prime open water area.

Last July, Hutchinson warned the city that it had to enact some sort of plan for the central waterfront area or he would sell the property "in bits and pieces."

EOC Director Is In S.F. Hospital

He entered the hospital Wednesday and missed Thursday night's meeting of the EOC directors. Secretary Judith Harris said she does not know how long Carey will be confined. In his absence, Peggy Woodruff is acting director.

Press Suppression Unsound —No Less So On Campus

"WE DENOUNCE THAT more than 40 journalists are in prison in Castro's Communist Cuba. Many of them have been incarcerated for 3,688 days (as of Feb. 28)."

As of today, this notice could read 3,703 days.

Any way you read it, it adds up to a shocking 10 years-plus.

The notice appears in each issue of PRESS OF THE AMERICAS, a publication of the Inter-American Press Association (IAPA). It has appeared in every monthly issue since 1964 when the annual assembly of IAPA, held in Mexico City that year, voted to publish the notice regularly so long as Castro's Communist Cuba continues to suppress freedom of the press.

As a result of recent press suppression in Brazil, the IAPA plans to reschedule its 1970 annual assembly. It will take place somewhere other than Brazil as previously planned.

One newspaper was shut down for five days in Rio de Janeiro by the government of Brazil recently. Authorities also confiscated some editions of a paper in Sao Paulo. Newspapermen have been harassed; a kind of censorship has been imposed on the press of Brazil.

The IAPA has registered strong protests and sent representatives to discuss the situation with Brazilian officials.

Panama and Haiti are among other Latin American nations with press suppression in force.

It is not an encouraging picture, especially since only last October the IAPA's general assembly in Buenos Aires received a most optimistic report from its Committee on Freedom of the Press. Since that time there has been a rapid reversal; Freedom of the press is on the defensive once again in Latin America.

DR. S. I. HAYAKAWA WOULD do well to take serious note of all this in his dealings with rebellious student publications like the Daily Gater at San Francisco State College.

Anybody who reads the Daily Gater with any regularity and care knows that it is not a true newspaper any more; it has degenerated into an overgrown propaganda pamphlet, representing something much narrower and more restricted than a cross-section of student body opinion.

If the Gater were making any effort toward impartial news coverage, it would (1) attempt to eliminate one-sided accounts of campus happenings, (2) confine its political views to editorial columns as distinguished from news columns, and (3) provide for presentation of varying points of view.

If it does any of these things, the effort is so miniscule that it is not discernable even to the careful reader.

It is readily understandable that one who sits in a seat as hot as that occupied by Dr. Hayakawa would be happier to have the voice of the Daily Gater silenced, at least until it can be staffed by people representative of the rank and file of the student body and better informed about ethical journalistic practices.

But there has to be a better way than simply closing it down, even temporarily.

ROBERT J. MARKLE, assistant professor of political science at College of New Rochelle in New York, is among those who have observed that most campus newspapers are subsidized monopolies.

"The money to sustain them is either a tax on all students or a grant from the college (or public) treasury. . . These publications are subsidized through mandatory college fees or from the general college fund," Markle has written.

"Their purpose," he observed, "is allegedly to provide news of the college community and a vehicle for student opinion."

Actually, Markle reports, "these publications have tended to represent the views of a small number of students who monopolize the student press. . . Most important is the unwillingness of some college editors once in control to yield news space to fellow students. . . The adult community has some responsibility for turning freedom of the press into personal license.. . ."

The final sentence above would certainly be disputed by the leaders of today's campus dissidents.

Dissidents probably would refuse to believe that Markle is still under 30 — but he is, nevertheless.

GOVERNOR REAGAN IS unquestionably right when he says that campus disruptions probably would not have got so far out of hand if administrators had adopted a tougher line against them, sooner.

And the governor probably is right when he says only a tough-line administration will end disruptions and return peace and tranquility to our campuses.

But in the process we must beware of oppressive, suppressive measures like shutting down campus newspapers that disagree with "establishment" policy.

Editorial control of the Daily Gater should be made more broadly representative of the student body which subsidizes it, but it shouldn't be suppressed, even temporarily.

Administrators should not respond to campus press criticism, inflamatory as it may be, but resorting to the violence of suppression, even temporarily.

—Jack Craemer

Acacias—Changing Moods

Acacias have just passed their prime in most of Marin. At the height of their blooming period, the cascades of golden blossoms are a splendid sight, truly beautiful, taken individually or collectively. But, at the same time, they sprinkle their highly allergenic pollen over everything, like the powder of a careless, dangerous woman.

Then the gold turns to brown and the rains make the trees resemble huge, very dirty dish mops.

It takes several months for the seed-pods to appear, tiny things that resemble pea-pods, and are a reminder that acacias belong to the pea family. These soon dry out and commence to fall. In this mood, big, brownish-purple seed clusters adorn the tree and litter the ground with every breeze from June to September.

Then, their natural job of seed-producing done, they send out new shoots of foliage, less dark-green than the old. Finally, on the tips of all the twiglets new buds begin to swell, and the cycle begins once again.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Special Section For Youth Needed

Some recent mental notes have developed into a letter. I have often wished there could be a section of the newspaper geared to the youngsters. (I think the New York Times has such a section.) We have children interested in the weather, the earthquake rumors, the recent school bond election, reports of a sea monster in South America, a 99-year imprisonment — in short everything they hear mentioned or spot in a headline — including marijuana and other drugs, the campus disorders and the war in Vietnam. The stories they attempt to read are often too long, too difficult or presuppose a knowledge or understanding they do not have. Perhaps just a page every week would be possible. It would encourage reading, help answer questions, and inform our newest readers. Incidentally, it would also start the habit of newspaper reading.

I was disappointed in the recent special travel section. There was no mention of inexpensive or reasonable travel suggestions for an average family.

A recent editorial comment charged that the blue-eyed, brown-eyed days at the Reed School was a subtle form of fostering or encouraging discrimination. If properly discussed and presented, I think it would be an effective way of proving how unfair and ridiculous any form of discrimination really is.

Home Owners, It's Time To Riot

It's about time for homeowners to riot! No less than four articles in the I-J so far this week (and it's only Thursday) have related new tax grabs proposed by politicians or educationists — and now a careless politician (speaking for the Bay Area Transportation Study Committee) has come out publicly with the brutal, cynical truth as to how they regard us.

"Property taxation poses no administrative or compliance problems and offers no opportunity for tax avoidance . . . and property tax rates can be readily adjusted to the means and circumstances of the area. . . ."

In other words, fellow homeowners, we're caught in our own traps: our homes can not be hidden, it's easy to collect because we must pay up or lose them, and they know they can always squeeze more out of us. . . .

Easter Seal Month A Chance To Help

Now when people are for throwing away, or for being returned from extended trips in boxes and on crutches, Easter Seal Month is a reminder that we can at least do something about our home shank of the cynical syndrome.

All year round, Easter Seal projects represent you — they have no other "angel" — in good works for hundreds of children and adults who might otherwise be forgotten.

Miracle Of Creation: 'I' That Embraces All

By RABBI HAIM KEMELMAN

"Let us make man," thundered God's voice across the empty void, whatever that may have been. To whom did He speak and for whose assistance did He call in making that historical mammal, man, in His own image?

He spoke, I believe, to potential man, as He held that lump of matter to fashion it after His likeness: I will endow you with the gifts of self, with a waking intelligence, with an experiencing consciousness, with an indwelling spirit and soul. But your task, man, is to fulfill that potential self within you into a creative selfhood, constantly unfolding and developing to full realization.

HUMAN LIFE was never meant to to be the creation of a full-blown perfect model, sprung from the head of God, immaculate and flawless. Man is in the making until the last rhythm of his fluttering heart is stilled. And the totality of a lifetime underlies his struggle for selfhood.

While the endowment of self is a gift, a God-miracle, the primacy of selfhood is an achievement. The miracle is man: a small heap of bones and tissues organs and nerves, glands and some gray matter called brain; a marvelous system of interconnected and interchangeable activities, sensations and feelings. What sparks the charges, the impulses that flow into our nerves to ignite in us the awareness of our consciousness, the recollections of our memories, the senses of our emotions? Ask the biochemist, the physiologist. You seek answers, refine definitions and come, at least, to define the indefinable and explain the inexplainable in a word: miracle!

That enthralling self is God's creation and credit should be given to Him alone. But the unfolding of a creative and conscious selfhood, is man's work; and this is his achievement, his glory, his wonder.

As we bring into full play the conscious awareness of our total personality, we stand God-like on Olympian heights.

"I" CAN EMBRACE the whole world and experience the space relationships and time zones. "I" am in the universe, but the universe is also in the consciousness of "I." "The light," Fichte said, "is not without me, but within me, and I myself the light."

The "I" must be unveiled in a selfhood of original form, unrepeatable and uncomparable. "I" am the exclusive property of my individual person. I am affirming, denying, accepting, rejecting. I have a diary of my own, a private world and experience that can't be delegated to someone else. No one can step into my personal identity, nor take away my human birthright, in completing myself, in fulfilling myself, in accomplishing that work which God had begun in me, with me: "Let us make man," I can experience myself, I can create myself.

I, as far as I know, I alone, among other creatures, am witness to the Creator's imperial majesty and splendid immensity. I am still central, if not center, in creation, for I am testimony to the recognition of my intelligence. God needs me even as I need God. I am man because of myself, but I am more than what I am because I have a selfhood, awaiting my development in being the Creator's creator at work, affirming myself in the "sober certainty of waking bliss."

Viet Cong Offensive Stirs Anew Hawks' Demands For Bombing

SAIGON — Once again in this bitter, divisive war, an administration in Washington confronts a choice of evils. As in the past, the choice promises to make the American involvement more tangled and difficult.

For South Vietnam's president Nguyen Van Thieu the asnwer is easy. He advocated bombing of the north. While he does not quite say so, he would have the B-52s start the day-to-day pounding that for three years failed to stop the flow of men and material from north to south. This simple military prescription has a grimly familiar ring.

Granted, the provocation is great. The communist attack this time is nothing like as heavy as the Tet offensive a year ago. Yet it has taken a damaging toll — in a single week 453 American casulaties, more than in any week in nearly a year.

The shelling of Saigon produced new horrors in the slums of the city. It was random slaughter of women and children. The television film flown out of here a week ago was as sickening as any that has come out of the first war to be brought by TV into the living rooms of millions of families.

NEVERTHELESS, for all the pressure he must be under, it is hard to believe that President Nixon will order the bombing of the north resumed. His predecessor, Lyndon Johnson, wrestled with this decision as with none other in his five years in the White House. The decision was received with an enormous sense of relief all over the world.

Once started again, how can it be stopped? Or, rather, given a renewed and outraged demand to get the war over quickly so that Americans can move out, how can it be stopped short of the total bombing of the port of Haiphong and the dikes? This last was the pressure the Johnson administration had to resist.

The consequences on one score should be clearly understood. Whether with valid reason or not, the peace talks in Paris quieted some of the anti-Americanism generated by Vietnam. Renewed bombing would set off a wave of revulsion made manifest in demonstrations and violence. In Japan, where this reporter has just been, it could well bring down the government of Prime Minister Eisaku Sato and make a resonable settlement of Okinawa and the security treaty all but impossible.

TO A DEGREE hard to comprehend, Washington, under the Johnson administration at least, has been insulated from an awareness of what this tide of anti-Americanism means. One of Johnson's ablest and most loyal lieutenants, ending a world tour as one of the beneficiaries of the generosity of the Ford Foundation, put it this way on his last stop:

"I've been in 15 capitals in Europe and Asia and I've been amazed at the anti-Americanism I've found. It was everywhere except in Tel Aviv and Athens, and to an extent I had never imagined possible. I only wish I had made this kind of tour before I went to the White House.

Under Sec. of State Dean Rusk, the line was that the governments of most countries, even so-called neutral countries, were privately with us but they had to be careful what they said openly because of an extremist fringe. If that were ever true, it has long since ceased to be so.

THE BLUNT TRUTH is that on Vietnam the United States had virtually no support prior to the decision to curtail the bombing and get down to trying to talk peace in Paris.

For President Nixon, the heritage of the past has the taste of gall. Whatever his views may have been in the remoter past, the dilemma here today was not of his making. An Asian diplomat who has followed the course of the war over the years expressed it as well as anyone:

"Your president cannot be blamed for what is happening here. Responsibility for the errors of the past does not fall on him. But if he were to renew the bombing in the north this would no longer be true."

Just four years ago on the warning of his generals that the war was about to be lost, Johnson ordered a massive increase in American ground troops. The present level of 535,000 was reached. Yet the terrible and relentless war goes on.

ART BUCHWALD

Rewriting History Turns Hawks Into Doves—Or Something

WASHINGTON — It is only natural that those who served in the Johnson Administration want to be assured that they have their rightful place in history; and as time goes on, more and more Johnson officials will be leaking to the press the roles they played in some of the decisions that President Johnson had to make.

Just the other day Zachiariah Slododkan, who used to work in the White House, came to see me.

"You know I was always a dove on the Vietnamese War" he told me.

"ISN'T THAT funny?" I said. "I always thought you were a hawk. I remember meeting you at a party a few years ago, and you defended everything that Johnson was doing."

"That was just to throw you off," Zach said. "But in my conversations with the President I always advocated accommodation with Hanoi. I did this against Rensellear and Throwback, who were the real hardliners in the White House."

"I thought Rensellear was for halting the bombing in Vietnam."

"He wanted everyone to think that, but in the meetings with the President, Kornbean and I were the only ones who spoke up."

"BUT WEREN'T you the one who wrote the original speech stating that we had to make Hanoi come to its knees?"

"I wrote it against my better judgment. Drewhistle came up with the idea, and the Preisdent ordered me to write it up. Then Drewhistle last week in the Times said I was responsible for it. That wasn't the first time he's played that game."

"But Zach, I remember a speech you made at the University of Michigan attacking the entire press corps for its coverage of the Vietnamese War, and saying that we were misleading the American public about the great victory we were winning over three."

"I was misquoted."

"On television?"

"LOOK, DO YOU want to hear my side of what happened in the White House or don't you?"

"Of course, I do."

"Upchuck and Bearwolf were for escalating. Groundbief and Sluggard and I decided in favor of de-escalation, but the President had the ear of Stonedeff and Mestierbumer. I wrote a memo to the President clearly stating the pros and cons, but the memo was stopped by Ainsely who didn't want the President to get any bad news just when Lynda Bird was getting married."

"How come you never indicated this position in your off-the-cuff briefings to the press?"

"My briefings were being monitored by Witchcastle, and if it got to the President that I wasn't supporting his policy, I would have been out like a flash."

"BUT IF YOU didn't agree with the Preisdent's policies on Vietnam, why didn't you resign?"

"That's exactly what Upchuck and Bearwolf wanted me to do. Also, I knew Drewhistle wanted my office. I was damned if I was going to walk out and have them sneering at me. Besides, I would have lost my White House car privileges."

"So you decided to stick it out, even though you didn't agree with what President Johnson was doing?"

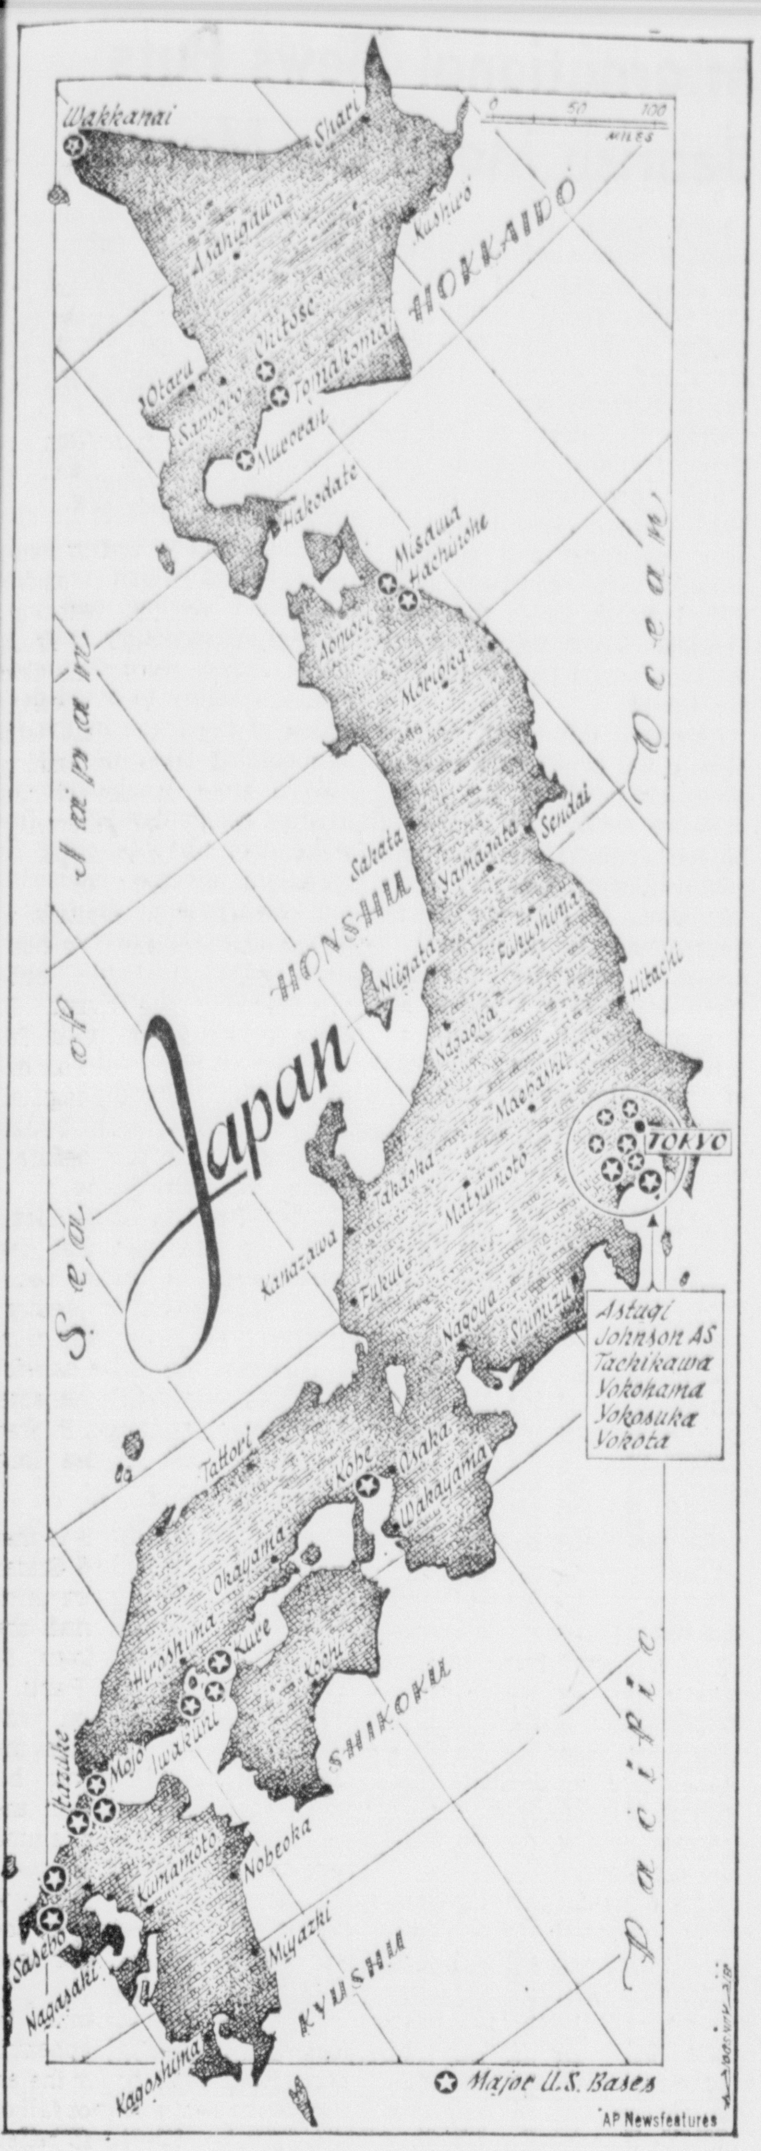
"Of course. But now that he's out, the least I can do is get the record straight on where I stood."

"I'm glad you did, Zach. If you hadn't told me I would have never known."

"Isn't that something?" Zach said. "All the time you thought I was one of them, I was really one of you."

MINIMIZING PRESENCE

U.S. Bows To Japan's Will On Bases



AP Newsfeatures

TOKYO (AP) — Scattered across Japan are more than 100 U.S. military bases and installations intended as links for a U.S. defense shield for Japan. Instead many of them have encouraged anti-Americanism.

In an effort to reduce public resentment and political controversy, the United States last December offered to move, relinquish or share with Japan 41 of the 148 facilities.

The move, the United States explained, would permit it to continue protecting Japan under the U.S.-Japan security treaty but with a minimum number of necessary bases.

Control over 10 of the 41 facilities were offered outright to Japan. They include training grounds around Tokyo and Hokkaido, Japan's northermost main island, and several installations and recreation areas in Yokohama and Yokosuka.

The U.S. offer was welcomed, although many Japanese agree the United States must maintain its bases in Japan to defend this country.

Most of the more explosive anti-U.S. protests have been encouraged by leftists and pacifists who want all U. S. military bases closed. The bases, they argue, expose Japan to retaliatory attacks if the United States gets involved in a war with another powerful nation.

Their opposition manifested itself most volently last year in student riots over the visit of the nuclear-powered aircraft carrier Enterprise to the U.S. naval base in Sasebo, in southern Japan.

The military installations, the leftists warn, will be prime targets in a drive to scrap the security treaty which comes up for review next year. The United States maintains its bases under the treaty.

Besides leftists, air bases and other installations have been criticized by the public for their "nuisance" factor. This is because many of them were built originally in unpopulated areas but are now engulfed by expanding urban centers.

Last summer residents of Oji, in Tokyo, demanded relocation of a new military hospital for Vietnam casualties in their area, claiming the soldiers might bring contagious diseases with them. The United States agreed to relocate the hospital if an alternate site is found.

In Tokyo and Yokohama, public officials say U. S. facilities occupy land which should be used for much-needed housing projects. And communities encircling air bases have raised complaints—not unfamiliar in the United States—about jet noises and the dangers of plane crashes.

One major installation which the United States has offered to relocate because of its proximity to heavily-populated cities is a U. S. Air Force base at Itazuke, in southwestern Japan. A series of major demonstrations occurred last year after an F4C Phantom from the base crashed into the campus of Kyushu University. There were no injuries.

The number of U. S. facilities in Japan today are a far cry from the 2,824 bases which the United States maintained in 1952, when it ended its World War II occupation of Japan. The bases of 1952 covered 487 square miles; the installations at the end of 1968 covered 131 square miles with only 55 square miles exclusively under U. S. control. The others were shared with Japan's Self Defense Agency.

Most of the U. S. installations are for communications. But there also are barracks, storages, training grounds, hospitals, naval bases and airfields. The U. S. military strength required to man them: about 41,000, half of them Air Force personnel.

The size of the U. S. military presence is not expected to be reduced sharply under the proposed changes. The monetary savings have not been tabulated.

Several bases which the United States will continue to maintain are linked to the war in Vietnam. Sasebo and Yokosuka serve as rest and recreation ports for sailors aboard warships operating off Vietnam, while planes ferrying troops to and from the war refuel at Misawa, northern Japan, and Yokota, southwest of Tokyo.

The United States also has other air bases — Atsugi, Fuchu, Johnson and Tachikawa, near Tokyo; Itazuke, near the port of Sasebo, and Iwakuni in western Japan near the Inland Sea. Planes from most of them conduct reconnaissance, rescue or anti-submarine patrols.

The U. S. decision to minimize its military presence has encouraged talk that Japan may be forced to beef up its own military defenses. The idea is not unpopular in a nation which prides itself for its pacifism after World War II, reflected in a constitution which renounces war except for self-defense.

Japan's military is represented by its Self Defense Agency, equipped mostly with U. S. planes, ships and weapons. It has authorization for a force of 250,000 men, but is about 10 per cent under strength.

The United States, deeply embroiled in Vietnam, is reportedly anxious to minimize its commitment in this part of the world — but without endangering the region's security.

It has encouraged Japan to assume a greater measure of responsibility for its own and Asia's defense.

But Japan, its international prestige regained by economic progress, is ambivalent about the kind of role it wishes to take on in Asia.

THIS WEEK In The World

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

The skyway to the moon lay open to America's astronauts at week's end, after the successful completion of the 10-day Apollo 9 mission which proved the space worthiness of the nation's lunar landing ship.

The U.S. space schedule calls for one more test flight in May before the historic first landing on the moon is attempted next summer.

The Apollo 9 splashed down in the Atlantic Thursday less than a mile off target and the threeman test team—Air Force Cols. David R. Scott and James A. McDivitt and Russell L. Schweickart, a civilian—was welcomed aboard the recovery ship Guadalcanal.

"Apollo 9 was as successful a flight as any of us could ever wish for, as well as being as successful as any of us have ever seen," George E. Mueller, associated administrator for manned flight of the National Aeronautics and Space Agency (NASA), told newsmen at the Mission Control Center in Houston.

Deke Slayton, director of Apollo flight crew operations, described the flight as "five days of panic followed by five days of boredom."

The comment reflected the dual nature of the mission—a period of testing for the untried lunar landing module, during which it was docked twice with the command module and operated for a time on its own, followed by a relatively routine five-day cruise in earth orbit.

Plans for the moon landing envision a dropaway to the lunar surface by two astronauts in the landing module while a third man in the command module orbits the moon. After a short stay on the earth's oldest satellite, the two moon leaders are to return in the landing ship and dock with the command module for the flight back to earth.

Both of Apollo 9's dockings proceeded without a hitch. On a similar test in March, 1966, Gemini 8 went into an uncontrollable spin and had to make an emergency splashdown.

Around The World; Around The Clock:

Saigon—A second week of heavy U.S. casualties in Vietnam, with 336 dead, suggested that the enemy is enjoying some success in what officials in Saigon regard as an effort to put pressure on the Nixon administration through disproportionately heavy American battle losses.

Washington—The Senate ratified the international agreement to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons, and speedy U.S. ratification is expected. The treaty becomes effective when it has been ratified by the United States, Russia, Britain and 40 other nations. It has so far been ratified by 10 nations, including Britain.

Coronado—The Navy court of inquiry into the loss of the intelligence ship Pueblo ended with its captain, Cmdr. Lloyd M. Bucher, defending his surrender of the vessel.

NATION'S AUTO CRITIC

Ralph Nader Means Many Things To Many People

WASHINGTON (UPI) —Depending on who's talking, critic Ralph Nader is:

1—A muckraker.

2—A consumer crusader.

3—A publicity-seeker.

4—A public defender.

For example, last month Federal Trade Commission Chairman Paul Rand Dixon described Nader's critical report of the FTC as a "smear."

But a few weeks earlier, former transportation secretary Alan S. Boyd named Nader to the National Motor Vehicle Safety Council —which advises the government on auto safety.

RALPH NADER
Praised, scorned, too

SENATE BACKERS

Nader is welcomed in the offices of such key senators as Warren G. Magnuson, D-Wash., and Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis. But his name is anathema to General Motors or Volkswagen —two longtime targets of Nader's criticisms.

If nothing else, most of Nader's friends and enemies agree that the title of lobbyist fits him best. But they also agree he is not the garden variety Washington lobbyist.

Nader never gives a cocktail party. He is not paid by any special interest. His office is something less than swank —a one-room affair in a downtown office building.

He does his own research, types his own "outraged" letters to government officials and hand delivers his news releases to newsmen.

Nader, a Harvard-educated lawyer, is prone to working 12-hour days, and has developed an amazing pipeline through which are funneled the tips, and unpublicized reports and research which form the basis for his criticisms.

THE RESULTS

What is the result of it all? Ask the auto industry, the drug industry, the gas pipeline industry, the fish and meat industry, the coal industry, the tire industry and anyone associated with the over-all problem of concentrated economic power.

Nader has criticized each of them. Supporters claim his criticism is valid, and possibly the only way to get results. His critics differ. They call Nader often inaccurate, unethical, and vindictive.

As for Nader himself, he describes his work this way: "I see myself as some lawyers should be —there have to be lawyers who don't represent the special interests. Otherwise the depredations which my legal brothers are inflicting upon society as a lobby for the corporate interests will continue unabated."

To expand this philosophy, Nader has some grandiose plans. Still in the courts is a $26 million lawsuit against General Motors stemming from the auto firm's attempt to investigate Nader following his widely publicized initial attacks on the auto industry.

If he collects, Nader hopes to set up a consumer foundation employing "young lawyers, economists, and scientists whose job it will be to represent the public interest in Washington."

NOT WAITING

Nader is not waiting for the court decision, however. He told UPI he is trying to convince one of the major philanthropic foundations to give him a grant to begin operations.

The question of money is the one most often raised by Nader's critics—where does he get it? Or more bluntly put: Who pays him to do what he does?"

Nader makes no secret about his finances. "Most of my income comes from lectures, some of which come as high as $1,000," he says.

"I get as many as 20 invitations a week — and if I accepted them all I would not be able to do anything else — much to the delight of my opponents."

Nader also teaches a course at Princeton University on the corporation. Added to this are the royalties from his bestselling book, "Unsafe at Any Speed," which Nader said "grossed about $60,000."

SPARTAN LIFE

Nader leads a Spartan-like existence. He doesn't own a car. He lives in a rooming house in downtown Washington, and even though he is a 34-year old bachelor, he takes little time out for social activities.

Nader's most closely guarded secret is his unlisted telephone. But he tells of getting a call "at 3 a.m. from an irate car owner in Switzerland."

Other car owners are constantly trying to track him down to take their accident case — something he never does. But a good share of his business is done over the telephone. So much so, Nader says, "that the phone bill runs around $500 a month."

What is accomplished by all this? Nader feels the main effect has been to interest the public in the idea that it should have someone to protect its interest just as business does. Nader claims that "99 per cent of the mail I get is favorable. People send me everything from defective emergency brake handles to shock absorbers."

MAIN GOAL

But his main goal is to influence legislation. It is not possible to pinpoint his accomplishments in this field. Most observers agree, however, he does deserve a share of the credit for new auto safety standards, tire standards, and legislation to regulate the meat and poultry industry.

Whether he wins or loses, Nader says he "expects to be around Washington for a long time."

PARTISAN LINES DRAWN

State's Lawmakers Determined To Subdue Campus Antagonists

Behind The News

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — California gave birth to the 1960's campus rebel, but this year the state's lawmakers are determined to subdue the troublemakers.

Up for consideration by the lawmakers are about 80 bills meant to get the dissidents off campus and, in some cases, behind bars.

Legislators have considered everything from building walls around the schools to selling them. Their decisions may well influence legislative action elsewhere.

Almost certainly the result will be a tightening of government control over higher education.

PARTISAN POLITICS

Another result has been the entrance of partisan politics into the higher education scene. Most of the restrictive legislation was presented by Republicans, and members of both parties accuse the other of exploiting the situation for political purposes.

The Legislature has shown a new reluctance to approve educational reform and a new willingness to cut college budgets.

Gov. Ronald Reagan believes "violence itself" has become the issue, and recent polls indicate that many Californians agree with him, as do people around the nation.

"The issue is simple," Reagan says, "the orderly process of education can't go forward in an atmosphere of violence."

CAMPUS PATROLS

So Reagan sent the National Guard and California Highway Patrol to University of California's Berkeley campus, and asked the Legislature to pass four get-tough measures to:

Expel any student convicted of a crime connected with campus violence and keep him out of state schools for at least a year.

Require that no teacher fired for taking part in campus disturbances can be rehired for at least a year without specific approval by the school's governing board.

Charge with trespass any student who is suspended or expelled in connection with campus violence and returns without permission.

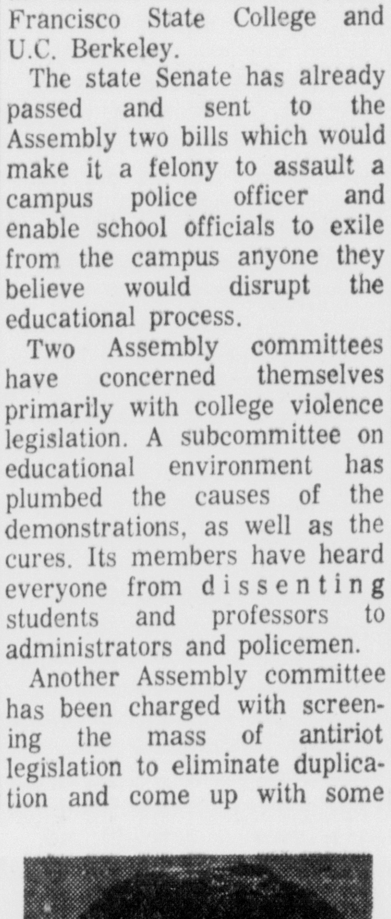
Ban the use of public address systems on campus without the permission of campus authorities.

Reagan ran for governor in 1966 with talk about cleaning up the "mess at Berkeley," and now the California Legislature is acting, largely prompted by the months of violence at San Francisco State College and U.C. Berkeley.

The state Senate has already passed and sent to the Assembly two bills which would make it a felony to assault a campus police officer and enable school officials to exile from the campus anyone they believe would disrupt the educational process.

Two Assembly committees have concerned themselves primarily with college violence legislation. A subcommittee on educational environment has plumbed the causes of the demonstrations, as well as the cures. Its members have heard everyone from dissenting students and professors to administrators and policemen.

Another Assembly committee has been charged with screening the mass of antiriot legislation to eliminate duplication and come up with some kind of cohesive plan.



GOV. RONALD REAGAN
Vows a cleanup

Among proposals now in the works are bills that would:

Require students to sign an oath agreeing to obey campus rules or be expelled.

—Deny state scholarships to ed penalties for nonstudents who take part in campus disruptions.

Provide a scale of graduat-students convicted of violations of law on campus.

Make it a misdemeanor to display the flag of a foreign nation at war with the United States if there is danger of inciting a riot.

Remove the regents of the University of California from state constitutional status and make them subject to statutory control.

A BERKELEY WALL?

Legislators once talked about walling off the University of California at Berkeley and setting up a Berlin-style "checkpoint Charlie" system requiring the 40,000-plus students, faculty members and employees to show identification before being admitted.

Such a system was used successfully at the much smaller two-year College of San Mateo following violence there, and Assemblyman John L. E. Collier, R-Los Angeles, thought it might work at Berkeley.

The prospect of selling the university and state colleges came up early this year when state General Services Director Andrew Lolli said he had received an offer from a private group that was interested in buying.

At least one state senator was enthusiastic about the idea. Republician John Schmitz of Tustin, the Legislature's only member of the John Birch Society, said that under such an arrangement demonstrators "would think twice about continuing to threaten to close down our state college and university system."

Nixon's Trip Brings To Head Leader Issue

By YORKE HENDERSON

LONDON (London Express) — President Richard Nixon's whirlwind tour brought to a head an issue which has been troubling Europe for some time now: Who speaks for Western Europe?

One man has never been in any doubt about the answer: Gen. Charles de Gaulle, the apostolic successor of Charlemagne, Louis XIV and Napoleon.

As originally conceived, President Nixon's itinerary gave the impression that America took De Gaulle at his own estimate.

The emphasis was on Paris. Plainly time and trouble would have to be expended on De Gaulle. As just another European, "an equal among equals," his resentment of American influence and his flirting with both Communist blocs and the Arab world would have been no more than troublesome. But, as the dominant pace-setter of Western Europe, they could be frightening.

But that was before Britain started to flex its diplomatic muscles.

Officially, the British are still committed to the idea of becoming members of the Common Market in Europe. But they are not prepared to wear the idea of belonging to an organization dominated by either De Gaulle or France.

This attitude on their part is not born of De Gaulle's repeated "non" to their application for Common Market membership.

In fact, cause and effect are the other way about. The French leader's intransigence springs from his unshakeable conviction that, once in the Common Market, the British would take over.

In the event, President Nixon's tour was preceded by a sequence of significant events.

First, Britain's defense minister, Dennis Healey, in Bonn for a European defense conference, stood up and said all the sort of things Europeans like to hear.

Effectively he warned the U.S.A. that if it made significant cuts in its conventional — that is, nonnuclear — military commitment in Europe the nuclear threshold would be lowered; adding that such an increased reliance on nuclear retaliation might breed a demand for the appropriate weaponry, independent of American control.

Would an American Trojan Horse (reportedly De Gaulle's description of Britain in relation to Europe) whinny thus defiantly?

Next, Healey demonstrated that — unlike Charles de Gaulle — he could make bellicose noises at the Russians. It would take only minutes, he reckoned publicly, to nullify Russian naval units in the Mediterranean in the event of war.

Could the utterer of such a warning be other than unshakeably pro-American?

About the same time Britain became very active in the European organization to which it does belong — the Western European Union. So active that they created in De Gaulle's mind the idea that they were using the union to maneuver themselves into the Common Market.

The general's reaction was unsurprising. France began telling the other union members what they could and could not do. They couldn't hold get-togethers without France and, as it happened, France didn't see the need of any such get-together at the moment.

Even the Germans weren't going to stand for that, and De Gaulle suffered the salutary experience of seeing his Common Market partners lining up with Britain against him.

Then, for a moment, it looked as if the General might be reasserting himself. The Germans unaccountably began to waver in their defiance of De Gaulle.

That was when the British played their trump.

Almost on the even of President Nixon's tour, they told the Germans, and the other Europeans concerned, that in an intimate conversation with Britain's man in Paris, Christopher Soames, De Gaulle had suggested talks between Britain and France about a massive realignment of European nations in both political and defense terms. America would be excluded. Britain, France, Germany and Italy would make up a sort of inner cabinet.

Virtuously, the British explained that they felt it only right that the others should know what the General had in mind.

France was still indignantly insisting that the British had badly misinterpreted what the General had told Soames, and the British were sorrowfully saying, no they hadn't, when President Nixon flew in.

By that time the Germans had stopped vacillating in De Gaulle's favor, and it had been effectively demonstrated that, for the moment anyway, Charles de Gaulle wasn't speaking for Europe.

Now, the whole sequence could have been inadvertent.

The French don't think that it was.

But either way, it must have convinced President Nixon that in considering who speaks for Europe, he would do well to keep Britain in the front of his mind.

International News Puts Bearish Mood On Market

NEW YORK (UPI) — The sound of retreat echoed through the stock market this week as Wall Street received a bitter reminder of the rough road that lies ahead in Vietnam. Trading was moderately active.

While Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird, returning from a four - day inspection tour of South Vietnam, said it would be both "desirable and possible" to make some reductions in the United States forces this year, President Nixon seemed to rule out such action for the immediate future.

Renewed talk that another hike in the prime rate—responsible for much of the selling pressure earlier this year—will be forthcoming, combined with comment from Treasury Secretary David M. Kennedy that the government is determined to continue necessary monetary restraints to slow inflation, also fostered bearish sentiment.

David Rockefeller, chairman of Chase Manhattan Bank, said another prime rate advance "is just a matter of time." The rate charged to a bank's major customers with class A credit ratings now is at an all-time high of 7 per cent following three increases since last December.

Some additional bearishly construed items included the resumption of gunfire in the Middle East, and a heavy British trade deficit which pressured the pound sterling and again touched off monetary fears just when traders were celebrating France's ability to avoid devaluation of the franc in the face of mounting labor unrest.

Word from Washington that existing conglomerates — firms which link up with other concerns in diverse industries—may face possible antitrust action, and a Commerce Department survey that manufacturers expect a sharp slowing in sales growth in the first-half of this year were other major headaches to investors.

ALMANAC

Today is Saturday, March 15, the 74th day of 1969 with 291 to follow.

The moon is between its last quarter and new phase. The morning stars are Mercury, Mars and Jupiter. The evening stars are Venus and Saturn.

On this day in history:

In 1892 New York became the first state to authorize voting machines.

In 1916 Gen. John J. Pershing was given command of 12,000 soldiers and ordered to proceed to Mexico to capture revolutionary Pancho Villa.

In 1939 Nazi German troops occupied what remained of Czechoslovakia after the Treaty of Munich.

In 1953 Russian Premier Malenkov said international disputes could be settled by peaceful means.

A thought for the day: Ralph Waldo Emerson said, "Friends may well be reckoned the masterpiece of nature."

Characters All In Cast

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — Nine male students at Helena Senior High had either an arm or a leg in a cast one morning recently.

They told of being in an auto accident the night before when a car had rolled over near Hauser Lake.

But, everyone had forgotten it was Senior Week. The young men had mischievously concocted the story and helped each other in applying plaster casts for a prank.

HOW TO PLAY

WINNING BRIDGE

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

Redouble On Third Round Is Cue Bid To Show Singleton

During a slam auction you may bid a suit to show the ace, and an opponent may double to show length and strength in the suit. If your partner redoubles, he tells you not to worry about an opening lead in the doubled suit. He has the king or singleton to take care of the second trick in that suit, just as you promise the ace or void to take care of the first trick.

Opening lead — ♣ K

TO SHOW ACE

In today's hand for example, South bids four clubs to show the ace of that suit and to suggest a slam at spades. South does not promise any particular length in clubs.

West's foolish double shows length and strength in clubs. This kind of double makes sense if North is going to be declarer since then East may need help in finding a good opening lead. When West himself is going to be the opening leader the double tends to help the opponents.

In this case North redoubles to show that he has the king or a singleton in clubs. North would not redouble with general club strength because it is too unlikely that South will want to play at four clubs redoubled when he is obviously considering a slam in spades.

ENCOURAGES SOUTH

The news that North has help in clubs encourages South to go on to a slam. If North passed the double of four clubs, indicating club weakness and minimum values for his bidding up to that point, South would probably settle for a mere game contract.

South has no trouble in the play. He takes the ace of clubs, ruffs a club with the nine of spades, returns the low spade to the jack, ruffs another club in dummy and draws two more rounds of trumps. He then cashes the top diamonds and ruffs a diamond.

SLAM SAFE

If the diamonds broke favorably, South would make seven. As the cards lie, South eventually gives up a heart trick, but his slam is safe.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one heart, and the next player passes. You hold:

♥ Q 9 8 7 4
♦ 10 6
♣ K Q J 9 4.

What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid four hearts.

This jump to game shows strong trump support (often five cards or more) with a singleton or void in a side suit and some sort of high-card strength but not more than nine points in high cards.

Five Courageous Men (And A Cat) Vs. The Sea

By JACK SCHREIBMAN

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Five men, alone in their little sailboats, embarked at noon today on one of the toughest yacht races anyone could dream up—6,000 miles from San Francisco to Tokyo.

It is the first singlehanded transpacific race in yachting history, and will be a grueling test of courage, skill and equipment.

The acknowledged favorite to win is Frenchman Eric Tabarly, winner of the 1964 solo transatlantic yacht race, who is sailing the racing machine Pen Duick V, a 35-foot engineering marvel.

Tabarly's boat is made of aluminum, boasts ballast tanks for increasing stability and a dozen other gadgets including a trim tab on the keel for improving balance.

The only other Frenchman in the race is Jean-Yves Terlain, sailing a 30-foot fiberglass sloop, Blue Arpege.

The lone American entrant is Jerry Cartwright of Portland, Ore., in the boat he built himself, the 29-foot fiberglass sloop Scuffler II. He's taking a cat along — Henry.

Rene Hauwaert, a Belgian who calls himself a "tramp," is sailing his elderly gaff ketch Vent De Suroit (Southwest Wind) "for the fun of it."

These four are following the same strategy — head southwest and ride the tradewinds north of Hawaii right across the ocean, then turn north to Japan.

Claus Hehner of Germany, in the 35-foot steel sloop Mex, is the only entrant who will travel the great circle route, taking him about 1,000 miles south of the Aleutians. It is the shortest route, but the roughest, since he will be punching into head winds.

All the entries, highly independent men, are fascinating characters, befitting the kind of adventure they are on. They made final preparations this week at San Francisco Yacht Club in Belvedere and started the race from the St. Francis Y. C. in San Francisco.

Tabarly is an iron man, small wiry and powerful physically. He hardly speaks at all. His friends say that when he sails solo he sleeps at night only an hour at a time, in the belief that the man wins who sleeps least.

He is disgusted about the race rule that he must carry 45 gallons of water. Tabarly likes wine. He likes huge compasses, because he can sail a more accurate course.

Terlain is affable, talkative, and methodical about his preparations. But pre-race tension didn't keep him from taking Blue Arpege out last night for a leisurely sail at sunset in light winds. Besides his sailing, he'll be kept busy on the long voyage making movies he hopes will be part of a television special.

Cartwright, who has a gorgeous wife and is considered mad to leave her ashore while he sails off by himself, sounds like a cowboy, is easy going but fiercely determined to prove himself and his boat, which has no toilet, no motor, no transmitter and only bare navigational equipment.

Cartwright got ruffled when someone suggested he was taking Henry, the cat, as emergency food.

Hehner, an architect, pays painful attention to everything on his beautiful racer. He is soft-spoken and friendly to everybody, and personally supervised the loading of schnapps and beer on his vessel.

Hauwaert is everybody's favorite. His beat-up old ketch, which he's been sailing all over the Pacific alone for four years, was always swarming with visitors.

A spartan fellow with limited funds who is used to doing without, he was highly put out at the rule which demanded he put on lifelines.

But he is proud of his transmitter, a two watt radio that couldn't reach across San Francisco Bay.

Sponsor of the race is the Slocum Society, named for the yankee captain, Joshua Slocum, who in 1898 became the first man to circle the world alone in a small boat, the Spray. The society has about 500 members around the world, all interested in long, lone passages in little boats.

Determined Davenport Battles The Whiz Kids

PHOENIX—Each spring some whiz kid is supposed to run Jim Davenport into retirement. And each spring Davenport hangs on just a little harder.

It isn't getting any easier for the going-on-36 veteran but he still has that weathered look of old leather and determination. Nobody will be surprised if Davenport is at his old third base stand when the new baseball season opens.

At the moment there is an awful lot of traffic at third. Clyde King, the rookie manager of the Giants, is giving Tito Fuentes, Bob Etheridge and Charlie Smith a shot at the hot corner which Davenport has handled so ably on a full or part time basis ever since the Giants moved west more than a decade ago.

Five seasons ago it was Jim Ray Hart who was supposed to run Davenport into the ranks of the unemployed. The contrast between Hart's glove and the golden one of Davenport was painful to watch. So Davenport went back to third and Hart to left field where the young slugger does a reasonably respectable defensive job.

Etheridge Back For Another Try

Two seasons ago Etheridge was the wunderkid who was going to be Davenport's successor. Etheridge hit .325 at Phoenix. The Giants needed that kind of bat. So they called Etheridge up near mid-season. He hit .226 in 40 games. Davenport hit .275 in 124. Etheridge was sent back to the minors last year. Now he is up again.

Davenport keeps his own counsel. Like the old pro he is, Davenport is a doer, not a talker. Take, for example, the incident in the second game of the Cactus League's current campaign. It was at Tucson. The Giants were leading 9-4 in the ninth. They had the game all but safely tucked away but no game is over until the final out, a corny cliche but nevertheless a true one.

Saves Rookie From Embarrassment

Rich Robertson, the promising rookie righthander out of Santa Clara University, was on the mound for the Giants. He had retired seven in a row since coming on in the seventh inning for his spring debut.

With one out in the ninth Robertson walked Lou Klimchock and balked him to second. It was the kind of thing that is embarrassing to a pitcher. More importantly, it was the kind of thing that could set in motion a wild inning.

Davenport took care of the situation for Robertson on the rookie's next pitch which Larry Brown lofted high and foul along the third base line of Hi Corbett Field, a picture ball park that is spring headquarters of the Cleveland Indians.

Tremendous Ovation From Crowd

Davenport raced to the waist-high fence along the line, crashed the barrier in a tumbling fall over it. The going-on-36 veteran landed on his head on the bleacher side of the fence. But he hung onto the ball.

The crowd of 3,607 Tucson fans gave Davenport a tremendous ovation. The final out came a moment later. Every one of Davenport's teammates walked over to congratulate him.

"What an inspiring lesson for the young players," said the new manager of the Giants. "Old pros know only one way to play it—hustle right down to the final out."

Warriors Take Breather After Beating Pistons

The San Francisco Warriors are in a relatively long rest period, after beating the Detroit Pistons 114-110 last night before 4,004 fans at Oakland Coliseum Arena.

The Warriors won't be back in action again until Tuesday, when they meet Atlanta in the San Francisco Cow Palace, but fruits of their Friday night victory were sweet.

They moved one game above the .500 mark, making them look a little better for the berth they have cinched in the National Association playoff.

San Francisco moved substantially ahead of Detroit, then withstood one of those late rallies.

The Warriors had a 14-point lead midway in the fourth period when Detroit started a drive that put the game in a tie, 103-all.

Bobby Lewis hit two free throws for San Francisco, however, and Jeff Mullins hit two more at the five second mark to ice the victory.

Mullins was San Francisco's leading scorer with 32 points, but Detroit's Dave Bing outdistanced him with 35.

Giants Love That Bye-Bye Bunny Ball

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The San Francisco Giants and the California Angels agree the experimental "rabbit" baseball seems to carry further than standard models, but as Willie Mays puts it, "you've got to hit it first."

The Giants pounded the Angels, 13-1, in a Cactus League game yesterday that was played with the experimental ball — supposed to be 10 per cent more resilient than the ball in regular use.

The Giants had 15 hits, three of them by Bobby Bonds, three by Don Mason and two by Mays.

"When you hit it, it seems like an explosion," said Bonds, who hit two home runs of over 400 feet that would have been gone with any ball. "But I could not feel any difference."

"It jumps off the bat pretty good," said Mays.

The Angeles had only four hits and baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, an observer at the game, said with a smile, "They claimed we were only using it for one team."

Kuhn, who saw a game with the experimental ball Thursday in Lakeland, Fla., between the Detroit Tigers and New York Mets, said, "There's no question in anyone's mind that it is definitely livelier. It seems to have more effect on balls hit in the infield, especially line drives and hard grounders."

Kuhn said more experiments with the ball would be carried out in exhibition games during the season to see if it was an acceptable way of lessening the imbalance between pitchers and hitters.

"We're looking to see if it produces more hitting," he said, "and if it does, whether we want to produce it this way or another way. We could use it next year if it's desirable."

The ball has a larger core, made only of rubber, instead of the smaller cork and rubber combination in balls now in use.

Kuhn said the higher seams on the new ball might give the pitcher some advantage with his grip to offset the speed it carries off the bat.

Juan Marichal, the Giants' ace pitcher, took a look at the ball and said, "I don't mind if they hit it over the fence, but when they hit it back to the mound you could get killed, it moves so fast."

Kuhn said he didn't think hitting the pitcher was a serious risk, but did admit, "I haven't heard a hitter complain about the ball yet."

The Giants, 5-2 for the spring, nominated Bob Bolin for mound duty against the Angels today and Juan Marichal to oppose Chicago's Cubs tomorrow. If Marichal is still unsigned, Rich Robertson will start.

Williams Learning Sad Facts Of Life

By MARTIN LADER
UPI Sports Writer

Ted Williams may have to resort to chasing rabbits if he wants to bag his first victory as a manager.

Williams, quickly learning the sad facts of baseball with the weak-hitting Washington Senators, watched his club drop its eighth consecutive game of the exhibition season yesterday, a 3-1 loss to the expansion Montreal Expos.

While the Senators have scored only 16 runs in the eight games, an experimental "rabbit" ball has been bouncing around the spring circuit, spicing the attack of other teams that don't need the help as much. It was used in Phoenix, Ariz.,yesterday and the San Francisco Giants clubbed 15 hits for a 13-1 rout of the California Angels.

One team that has been getting along just fine with the old ball is Cleveland, and the Indians stretched their winning streak to five games with a 4-2 triumph over the Seattle Pilots. Luis Tiant, a 21-game winner last year, allowed Seattle one run and four hits in six innings.

The New York Mets, who had their shot at the "rabbit" ball Thursday, continued their recent surge of hitting by blasting the National League champion St. Louis Cardinals 16-6 behind 22 hits. Amos Otis, Ken Singleton and Al Weis homered for the Mets, who have 47 runs in their past four games.

TWINS WIN

In other camps: Frank Quilici homered in the eighth inning to give the Minnesota Twins a 1-0 triumph over the Atlanta Braves . . . A two-run double by Woody Woodward helped the Cincinnati Reds to a 5-2 victory over the Houston Astros . . . The Chicago White Sox rallied for five runs in the seventh inning and Bill Melton and Ron Hansen hit homers en route to a 9-3 decision over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Billy Conigliaro drove in three runs and Mike Andrews two as the Boston Red Sox beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 7-4 . . . Run-scoring singles by Bill Freehan and Dave Campbell gave Detroit a 4-2 success over Philadelphia . . .Frank Robinson raised his batting average to .571 with a double and a homer as Baltimore tripped the New York Yankees 5-2 in a night game . . . and San Diego defeated Oakland 8-4 with the aid of Al Ferrara's three-run homer.

Fighter Dies After Surgery

LONDON (AP) — Ulric Regis, 27-year-old Trinidad heavyweight boxer, died today after undergoing an operation for removal of a blood clot on the brain.

Regis was outpointed by Joe Bugner in an eight-round bout on Tuesday night. He was found unconscious in his hotel room Wednesday morning.

Although Regis was knocked down twice in the fight, he did not seem to be seriously hurt.

Redwood Netters Win

Redwood High School's tennis team opened its season in resounding fashion yesterday, winning 7-0 over Vallejo High at Vallejo. Giant winners were Steve McDonald, Bob Knight, Tad Isaccs, Andy Walker and Bruce Patton.

Howard Signs For $100,000

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Slugger Frank Howard ended his holdout with the Washington Senators today, signing for a reported $100,000.

The 6-foot-7, 260-pound outfielder had been holding out for $330,000 for a three-year contract and later brought his demands down to $125,000 for one year. He settled for a one-year pact.

The 32-year-old power hitter from Green Bay, Wis., came to the Senators in 1964 from the Los Angeles Dodgers after he had hinted of possible retirement.

NEW NUMBER

Howard appeared at the press conference, wearing his new number, "33." He was flanked by owner Bob Short and Manager Ted Williams, wearing Howard's old "No. 9."

The big hitter got approximately $50,000 last year and a $5,000 bonus for a home run spree in May during which he hit ten homers in 20 at bats over a six game span.

Best Prayer Is Best Player In Pensacola Golf Tourney

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — After seven years on the professional golf tour, Dick Crawford finally knows how it feels to lead a tournament.

Like Tommy Aaron, Crawford still doesn't know how it feels to win, but he's in a good position to find out going into today's third round of the $100,000 Monsanto Open with a one-stroke lead over Lee Trevino, Ken Still, Ray Floyd, unheralded Jim Colbert and rookie Grier Jones.

The 29-year-old, two-time NCAA champion from the University of Houston posted a 67 yesterday after a first-round 68 for a 36-hole total of 135 over the par 71 Pensacola Country Club course.

JUST PRAYED

"I had an idea I was close after the 15th hole, but I didn't know I was leading," Crawford said. "I just prayed I could keep playing."

The 1959 Southern Amateur champion from Bella Vista, Ark., won more than $25,000 on the tour last year but his best finish so far this year was a tie for 10th at Doral. He missed the cut at Orlando last week.

Trevino, the U.S. Open champion, shared the first-round lead at 67 with newcomer Larry Hinson, Australia's Bruce Crampton and Aaron, but appeared to have bogeyed himself out of contention for the $20,000 first prize with a 38 on the first nine. But Trevino birdied three of the last four holes to come home in 69 and tied at 136 with Canada's Al Balding, unknown Bill Garrett and Aaron. Crampton fired a 71 for 138.

Crawford said the turning point of his round could have been the third hole, where he scrambled for a par four with an 18-foot putt after hitting into the woods.

His golfing psychology?

"I don't go out for a definite score.

"I also recommend prayer."

FISH AND GAME

By AL GIDDINGS

Welcome News: State Won't Hike Licenses

The state's hunters and fishermen will not have to pay any more than present dues for licenses, at least in the immediate future.

That little bit of welcomed news is part of the 1968 annual report issued by the State Department of Fish and Game. The report was given by department director Walter T. Shannon, who has since retired and been replaced by Ray Arnet.

Some of the highlights of the report:

SALMON AND STEELHEAD — Continued declines in fishery landings and spawning runs of Central Valley king salmon stocks prompted the department to recommend sport fishery restrictions to the Fish and Game Commission. The department plans also to recommend a reduction in length of the 1969 commercial troll season.

Although it has had some effect, we do not lay blame for these declines on those who take salmon for sport or profit, but rather on an ever-increasing number of problems which combine to reduce the survival of small salmon. These include unscreened irrigation diversions, forming of gravel silt and gravel removal, predation, pollution, vegetation encroachment on spawning riffles, and inadequate water flows, or fluctuations of temperatures occuring naturally or resulting from other causes.

The department does not suggest that fishery restrictions will provide a cure-all for the salmon dilemma. They are intended to provide insurance that enough salmon will reach the spawning beds so that our stocks will not decline further.

Construction of the Mad River Salmon and Steelhead Hatchery proceeded on schedule. This $2.2 million installation will be completed in 1969. Annual production will be 1,000,000 yearling and 5,000,000 fingerling salmon and steelhead for stocking in streams of the North Coast.

WATERFOWL — In January, 1968, as the 1967-68 waterfowl season closed, hunting success was the best of the season. Evidently the high duck population, good hunting weather, and more hunting days in the season helped to increase the duck kill 25 per cent over the previous season. Goose populations were up only slightly over the high levels of the previous year, but the 1,320,000 birds tallied was a new high for our aerial surveys. Public use on the state and federal hunting areas reached a new high when 102,796 hunters bagged 269,759 birds for an average of 2.6 birds per hunter.

This 1968-69 season, hunting has not been as good as the past season. The waterfowl migration has been later, and the warm mild weather has not been conducive to good hunting. However, the birds are now here for the winter in numbers comparable to last year.

DEER — The 1968 buck deer tag return was 29 per cent above the 1967 return. Checks on food locker plants are showing that approximately 40 per cent of the return tags are not being sent in. This indicates that the deer kill figures obtained from the hunter questionnaire which has consistently run twice the tag return figure appears to be a more accurate measure of actual hunter take.

CLAMS — A survey of clam beds used by sport fishermen in Tomales Bay revealed a well established resource for years to come.

LAW ENFORCEMENT — During the 12-month period ending No. 30, wardens made a total of 16,105 arrests for violations of fish and game laws and regulations. This is an increase of slightly more than two per cent over the number of arrests made during the previous 12-month period. Fines assessed by the courts totaled $479,563 during the past 12 months, compared to total fines of $464,254 assessed during the previous 12 months.

A plan to provide more effective and economical marine patrol coverage to offshore waters was partially implemented by the reassignment of patrol vessels. The Bluefin, a year-old 65-foot patrol vessel, was transferred to Morro Bay. Other vessels were shifted along the coast, and a twin-engine airplane is being purchased for offshore patrol work. The plan, when fully operational, will result in an annual saving of $70,000 in salaries and operational costs, as well as better law enforcement.

IN THE HUNTER Safety training program administered by the Wildlife Protection Branch, 38,000 youths received instruction on how to handle and use firearms safely. During the year, 650 sportsmen and other interested persons were certified as qualified instructors to train students in Hunter Safety classes. We now have approximately 3,000 certified volunteer instructors serving this program. The grant total of youngsters trained is 444,516.

1,009 See Oaks Win In San Jose

SAN JOSE (AP) — The Oakland Oaks broke away with 45 points in the third quarter to beat the Minnesota Pipers 138-122 in an American Basketball Association game last night before a crowd of 1,009.

Doug Moe collected 12 points in that quarter and Warren Armstrong 13. Armstrong ended up high with 29 while Moe had 23. Chico Vaughn paced the Pipers with 30.

Kent Captures Schoolboy Cage Tourney Title

Kent School, led by all-star Mike Connor's 13 points, won the Redwood Elementary School District basketball championship last night with a 36-29 victory over Ross before a crowd estimated by tournament director Dick Hart as 1,500 persons at Redwood High School gymnasium in Larkspur.

Ross School, which won the best cheering section award, was led on the floor by Scott Sorgen's 12 points.

Del Mar School of Tiburon won the consolation championship with a 41-38 overtime victory over Neil Cummins School of Corte Madera. Kevin Diamond and Poul Tikker each scored 15 points for the winners.

Players on the 11-boy all-tournament squad included Connor, Steve Boro and Jed Harrison of Kent, Tikker, Diamond, Daryle Edralin and Rick Russell of Del Mar, Sorgen, Jay Weaver and Matt Friedman of Ross and Scott Kaplan of Henry Hall School.

Tam Swim Team Tops Washington

Tamalpais High School swim team of Mill Valley defeated Washington of San Francisco, 56-30, yesterday at the Tam pool.

Tam's Bruce Averill won two events, setting a new school record in the 200-yard individual medley in 2:13.8 and taking the 100 backstroke in 1:01.1.

Tom Smiley also won the 400 freestyle in a school record 4:16.6 and 200 free in 1:58.6.

Tam won a "laugher" in class B, romping over Washington, 69-23, as Toby Byron and Glen Phillips each won two events.

Negro Athletes In World Of Extremes

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Negro athletes at predominantly white Southern colleges live in a world marked by extremes.

As performers they often win acclaim and recognition their white classmates never find. But when the cheering stops, they suffer problems their classmates never bear.

This is how three Negro basketball stars describe their lives on North Carolina campuses. The three, all from New York, are Mike Maloy of Davidson, Charles Davis of Wake Forest and Olympian Charlie Scott of the University of North Carolina.

"They don't accept me as a man," said Maloy, who with Scott is a second team All-American. "What they're saying is, 'Mike, you're an acceptable nigger,' and that's the last thing I want to be."

Social life can be one of the athletes' greatest problems. If a Negro attends school where there are few Negro coeds, he may have problems finding dates.

"I won't say you're restricted to dating your own race," said Davis, who as a sophomore led his team in scoring this year. "But down here it just works out better if you do."

Scott agreed. "Social life wasn't so good," said Scott, who is now married. "You have to realize that social life will be hampered."

The three said they came South for different reasons. Scott was graduated from Laurinburg Institute, a Negro private school in eastern North Carolina. Davis, on the other hand, pointed to the recruiting tactics of assistant basketball coach Billy Packer, and the influence of Wake Forest junior Norwood Todmann.

Maloy chose a Southern school because, "If I did well, more people would come down here to school."

Respect for their talents spares star Negro athletes from much prejudice and abuse, they said, at least on their own campuses.

In fact, Maloy complained that treatment is sometimes "too good." "My only complaint is that I'm treated too well here. Everybody wants to shake my hand and get my autograph and tell me how good I am, because I can play basketball."

Playing at a large university with an active Negro student organization can sometimes put a special strain on a Negro athlete, who must remain loyal to his school's team and to his race at the same time.

Scott is affiliated with the Black Movement at North Carolina and has attended meetings to voice the group's complaints to university officials.

But Maloy is one of only five Negroes in Davidson's 1,000-man student body. Although he was the first Negro to crack the campus fraternity system, he spends most of his free time with local Negroes in the town of Davidson.

"That's where I'd rather be," Maloy said, "trying to get my black brothers to seek their own identity."

But with the end of basketball season approaching, all three said they have enjoyed their experience and were happy in their schools.

"I have become kind of apprehensive of how people really feel," Scott said. "But now I have a better understanding of both sides of the racial issue."

One important result of the experience, they said, has been a deep sense of racial pride.

"I guess I'm up there near militant," said Maloy, who said he became interested in the Negro movement after reading the autobiography of Malcolm X. "I can't be a moderate like Martin Luther King was. It's hard for young people to wait."

Said Davis: "No matter what happens after college, I want to go into an area and teach black people, especially the young ones, what I have learned — that it's great to be black."

Santa Clara To Be Strong Again In '70

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Regardless of the outcome of today's regional basketball finale with UCLA, the Broncos of Santa Clara figure to be just as strong or stronger next season.

The Broncos carried a 27-1 won-lost record into today's National Collegiate Athletic Association's Far West clincher at Pauley Pavilion.

"They are a very physical team," said Gary Colson, Pepperdine coach earlier this year. "And they're very unselfish. If a man has a layup and a teammate is two inches closer to the basket, he'll throw him the ball.

MOVE PEOPLE

"They're so strong they just stand there and move people out of the way."

Next season the Broncs will do without 6-foot-6 senior Bud Ogden, a rugged 210-pounder.

Returning, however, are center Dennis Awtrey, a muscular 6-9 and 235 pounds; forward Ralph Ogden, Bud's brother who stands 6-5½, and guard Terry O'Brien, a 6-2½, 210-pounder. Also back will be starting guard Kevin Eagleson at 5-10.

The Santa Clara freshmen this season enjoyed a 22-1 season led by 6-9 Mike Stewart, a standout high school player in San Francisco, who averaged 23 points a game.

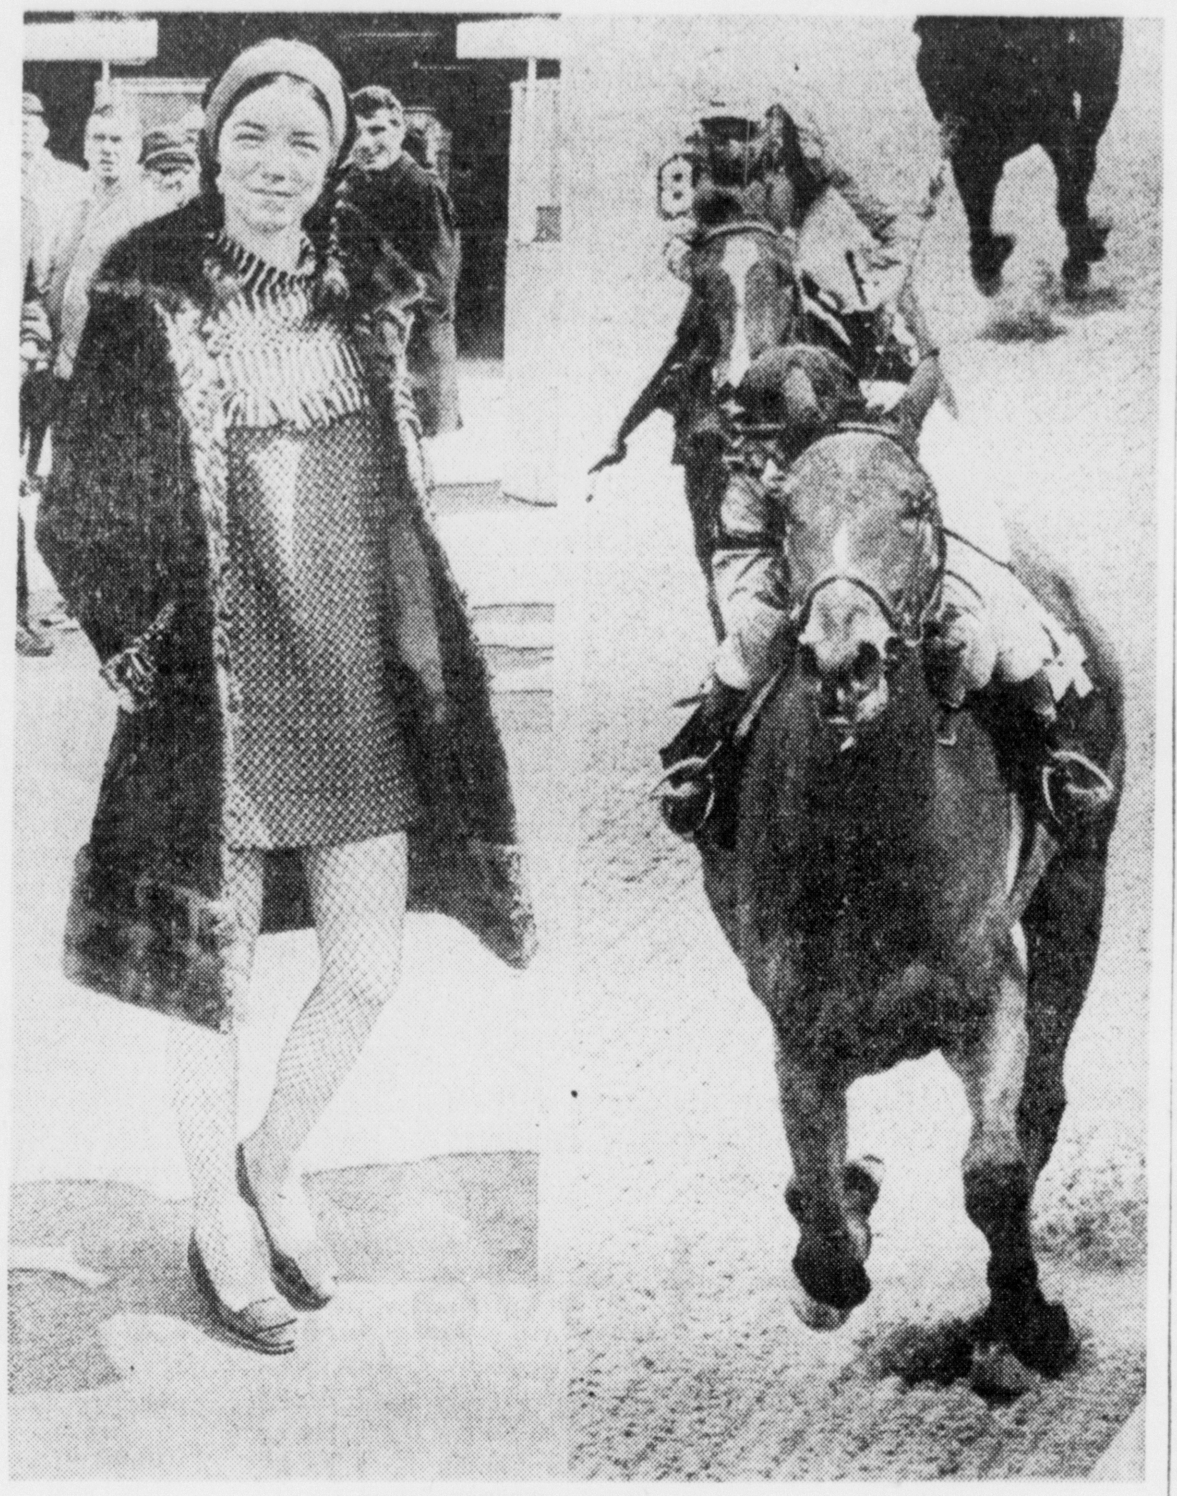
RETURNING BRUINS

But UCLA will be strong, too, despite the graduation of 7-1½ Lew Alcindor, 6-7 sharpshooter Lynn Shackelford and guard Ken Heitz.

Back next season will be forward Curtis Rowe and Sidney Wicks. Oregon Coach Steve Belko said earlier this season that Rowe, 6-6½, and Wicks, 6-8, were the best college corner men he'd ever seen.

Also returning for the mighty Bruins will be 6-9 backup center Steve Patterson, the team's fourth best rebounder and a 51.5 per cent shooter.

Up from the freshmen team are a pair of 6-1 guards--Andy Hill and Henry Bibby, both of whom averaged more than 20 points a game.



DRESSED TO KILL

Barbara Jo Rubin, first woman jockey ever to race in New York, arrived at Aqueduct yesterday dressed to kill — and she did. The 19-year-old Barbara scored with her first mount, Bravy Galaxy, a 13-1 shot that paid $28.20, $10.60 and $5.40. (UPI Telephoto)

Baltimore Reduces Magic Number To 3

By ASSOCIATED PRESS

Baltimore's magic number for clinching the National Basketball Association's Eastern Division championship is down to three.

The Bullets reduced it last night by nipping Cincinnati 130-128 in overtime. The loss ended the Royals' chances of making the playoffs.

Baltimore, with a three-game lead over Philadelphia, needs only to split its remaining six games to clinch, no matter what the 76ers do in their final four games.

The Bullets were down by 11 points with 10 minutes remaining against the Royals but wiped out the deficit on the shooting of Jack Marin and Earl Monroe. Cincinnati needed a three-point play by Tom Van Arsdale to force the overtime.

But Marin took charge in the extra session, scoring 10 of his 35 game points. Oscar Robertson led the Royals with 33.

A fourth-quarter burst gave Los Angeles a 111-103 win over Milwaukee. Three jump shots by Keith Erickson gave the Lakers a 91-86 lead which they never lost. Jerry West paced the winners with 23 points while Jon McGlocklin had 32 for the Bucks.

Terra Linda Wins In Prep Baseball

San Rafael's problem was too many runs, Drake's too few, but Terra Linda got just enough yesterday afternoon and was the only one of the Marin County Athletic League high school trio to win a baseball game.

While Drake of San Anselmo was no-hit at Vallejo, losing 1-0 and wasting a brilliant one-hit job by three Pirate hurlers, San Rafael's Bulldogs were losing a free-scoring game 14-9 to Terra Nova of Pacifica at San Rafael, and the Trojans of Terra Linda were hanging one to beat host Berkeley High, 4-3.

All-Leaguer Mike Timmel pitched four innings for Terra Linda, which got only two hits, but one was a bases loaded two-run single by Dewey Forry, who had "a great day in centerfield and helped us at the plate," according to coach Bob Corley.

Rick Raznikov was a perfect three-for-three at bat for San Rafael, with two walks, two singles and a triple, while Larry Brazda had a single and triple to Rog Thomas' single and two triples. But four errors helped Terra Nova.

Drake played well in defeat, giving Vallejo's Apaches only an unearned second-inning score, to lose, despite a one-hit performance by Stan Lilienquist, Bob McClain and Rick LaFrenchi. In the second, an Apache reached base on an error, stole second, advanced (after a walk) on a fielder's choice, then pulled a double steal, first and third, which seemed dead at the plate, but the catcher dropped the ball and the run scored.

Drake	000	000	0	0	0	3

Nice Day For Marin Prep Track Squads

Yesterday was a sunny day for Marin County Athletic League track and field teams as three of the local high schools won handsomely. Tamalpais beat Montgomery of Santa Rosa at Montgomery 77-50, Redwood edged Piedmont 64-63 at Larkspur, and Terra Linda routed El Molino 73-54 at Terra Linda. Novato lost to visiting Analy of Sebastopol, 53-74.

Luther Brown was a double winner for Tam, taking the 120-yard high hurdles in 15.8 seconds and the 180-yard lows in 21.2 in addition to anchoring the winning mile relay team. Mark Miller won the 440 in 54.5 and the 880 in 2:10.1; Kit Healy ran a 10:07 two mile, and Verdean Herbold put the shot 48 feet 2 inches. The Tam froshsoph team lost 67-59 despite an 18-5 long jump and a tie for the pole vault lead by Gregg Biber. Pat Bowen did a 4:46.2 mile for Tam.

Redwood edged Piedmont in a tense, excellent meet. The Giants were led by Jud Piller's 150 foot toss in the discus, Bob Bartell's 45.1 in the shot, a 10.22 2-mile by Lee Hotchkin (a sophomore), Chris Sigur's 10.3 hundred, Todd Norriss' 2:04.2 in the half-mile and Mike Wertz' 12-foot pole vault. The Redwood B's won 93-33 behind hurdlers Dennis Kuwatani (9.5 for 70 yards) and Brett Wiggins (22.3 for 180).

Ron Elijah's 10:06.2 won the two mile for Novato, added to Ron Sparling's 47-11 in the discus, and Vince Brown's 24.7 220-yard dash. The Novato B's lost 92-35.

John Dohn won the 100 in 11 seconds flat and the 220 in 24.4 for Terra Linda, which took nine of sixteen first places. The B's won 86-38 and the Frosh won by 96-13.

Terra Linda Netters Beat Marin Catholic

Terra Linda beat Marin Catholic 4-1 in a high school practice tennis match at Terra Linda yesterday afternoon.

Results: Bill Kinser (MC) def. Brian Carlisle, 6-8, 8-6, 6-2; Rich Milam (TL) def. Kevin Madera, 6-4, 7-5; Jim Hinshaw (TL) def. Roland Citienne 3-6, 6-3, 10-8; John Bateson and Doug Reid (TL) def. MARIN BOWLING HIGHLIGHTS

First Time Over Hurdles

By RALPH CHATOIAN

It was the first time over the hurdle for a lot of Marin County bowlers this past week.

In the Gutter Belles League at Greenbrae Lanes, for instance, JoAnn Elward had her first 500 series, a 503, and Joan Porter had her first 200 game, with a pin to boot. (And in the same league Mary Ann Ralsten was 75 pins over her average with a 208 line.)

Other first included Killy Mathews' 209 in the San Quentin Mixed Fours at Country Club Bowl in San Rafael, Joyce Troup's 224 in the Monday Washday at Nave Lanes, and Jean Preston's 531 in the Merry Mixers at Country Club Bowl.

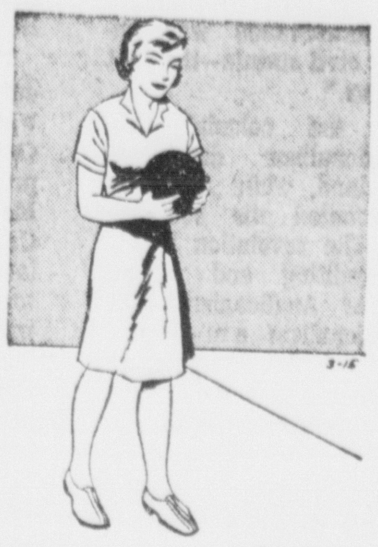
THIS AND THAT — Sandy Slack had a mighty big 191 triplicate in the 670 Scratch League and Gladys Brajkovich had a 144 triplicate in the Morning Glories, both leagues at Country Club . . . George Belles' 648 series at Country Club Bowl was topped by a 265 game, and it was in the 905 Classic . . . Jerry Little almost went all the way to 700 in the Mixed Mates League at Greenbrae Lanes, rapping out a 697 (247-225-225) series . . . Lee Selby had high score of the Marin County Mixed Travel League, 620 at Greenbrae.

PICKIN' 'EM UP — Doris Nave made good two splits in the Monday Washday League, the very diffcult 4-6-7 and the 2-7-10 . . . Joe Kenney, bowling for the Nave Lanes team in the California Trophy Mixed Traveling League, rapped out a 710 series at Castle Lanes in S. F. . . . In the Ladies 622 Classic at Greenbrae Lanes Sharon Wroten stole the show when she ran out games of 206, 226 (wow!) and 203 for a 675 three gamer . . . Kathy Robinson rolled a 215 line in the Mystery League at Nave Lanes, somewhat better than her 129 avg., and Clarence Johnson converted the 4-7-10 split . . . Marilyn Epidendio secretary of the Marin County Women's Bowling Association needed a 234 final line to hit a 600 in the Groggy Fours League at Greenbrae Lanes and that's just what she rolled . . . Karl Knutson, 8, rolled a 124 game in the Pee Wees at Country Club . . . Keith Ray led the Greenbrae juniors with a 222 line and 593 set.

DIDJA KNOW? — Total prize fund, excluding trophy monies, of the 21st annual Marin County Bowling Association tournament was $3,145. Broken down, $1,265 cash went in the team event (winning team Brandon Tire picked up $50); $800 went to doubles (winning tandem of Frank Bernardi and Dan Burke won $120); $811 cash went in singles competition (winner Elmer Tynes made $75); and $269 went in all-events rolling (champ Ray Haugen earned $50) . . . Hi-Lo's secretary, Faith Hicklin informs me Walter Karp picked up the 4-7-10 split and Pam Shannon converted the 5-7-10 (now THAT must have been quite a shot) . . . Nancy Wurz is really a steady bowler, rolling 497 series THREE weeks in a row in the Blue Chip League at Country Club Bowl . . . Bowlers in the Northern California Merchants League at Greenbrae Lanes are really buzzing over that series Tahoe Thunderbird rolled, games of 914, 908 and 914—2736, quite a scratch score for a handicap league . . . Joe Galbreath, 164 avg. rolled a 162-164-166, and that's called hitting your average, in the Friday Nite Leftovers League at Nave Lanes.

BOWLING TIPS

By MARION LADEWIG



There are bowlers who, especially in pressure situations, stand and look at the pins too long before they move into action. Sure, take in the situation and analyze it, but remember that your first thought is usually best. If you stand too long, as today's bowler is apparently doing, your muscles will "freeze" and you won't be relaxed later on.

Church Sprang From A Protest Movement

By LOUIS CASSELS
UPI Religion Writer

One of America's oldest and historically most important religious bodies originated as a protest movement within the Church of England in the 16th Century.

Its adherents were called "Puritans" because they wanted to "purify" the established English church of Roman Catholic influences that had survived the Reformation.

The Puritans were true spiritual sons of John Calvin — earnest, austere, suspicious of the comforts and pleasures of this world, fired with a great sense of rectitude and a conviction of their own "election" as children of God.

By 1563—five years after Queen Elizabeth I came to the throne—the Puritans constituted a sufficiently strong faction within the established Church of England to challenge its policies openly.

They first voiced "scruples" on a relatively trivial matter — the kind of vestments work by the clergy. Soon they were protesting against a whole range of "Romanish" practices —kneeling at communion, the use of the sign of the cross in baptism, the observance of holy days.

In 1580 they went a significant step further and denounced the whole idea of a hierarchical church governed by bishops. Instead, they said, each congregation should manage its own affairs, and elect its own minister.

The Church of England, backed by Elizabeth's government, reacted by imposing heavy penalties on "nonconformists." More than 200 ministers were suspended for involvement with the Puritan movement, and about 70 were sent to prison.

These acts of repression merely stimulated the movement, and when King James I succeeded Elizabeth on the throne near the end of the 16th Century, Puritanism was a thiriving force in English religious life.

James I was a notoriously pigheaded man, even by the standards of English royalty. He crushed every hope of an accommodation that would have permitted the Puritans to remain within the Church of England and, with a public promise to "harry them out of the land," launched a ruthless persecution.

Many of the Puritans fled to Holland. Although Holland granted them religious freedom, it could not provide all of them with homes and jobs.

By 1620 the plight of the transplanted Puritans had become bad enough to make them willing to undertake a dangerous adventure. A little band of men and women from the Puritan congregation at Leyden, Holland, returned briefly to England, and on Sept. 6, 1620, sailed from the Port of Plymouth in a frail 180-ton ship named the Mayflower.

They were bound for Virginia, where they had received a grant of land. But their tiny ship was blown far off course by North Atlantic gales, and they arrived instead in Massachusetts. They disembarked at Plymouth Rock, and promptly began building a church.

This first batch of Puritan colonists — who are known in our history books as "the Pilgrims" (for no good reason except to make things more difficult for school children)—soon were followed by others. By 1640, more than twenty thousand Puritans had emigrated from England to the rocky and inhospitable wilderness which they named "New England."

They were stern, hardy people, full of religious zeal. The churches they established were strictly "congregational" in government—which is to say that all questions, including the choice of a minister, were settled democratically, with each member of the congregation having an equal vote. Because of this distinctive form of church government, they came to be known in America as "Congregationalists."

In their eagerness to purge all remants of "Papalism" from their churches, the Congregationalists adopted a severely simple form of worship, built around scripture readings and interminably long sermons. (Some of the famous colonial preachers—Cotton Mather, for one—considered a two-hour sermon a relatively brief homily.)

The austerity of the congregational liturgy was reflected in the rigorously plain architecture of the churches in which it was housed. Everyone who has seen a New England village in the autumn must be forever grateful that the Puritan conscience permitted the addition of steeples, which were considered acceptable adornment because they pointed upward toward God.

To squelch any possible scruple about vain display, however, the steeples also were given a functional use as bell-towers, for summoning the faithful to church.

Although they had come to America seeking religious freedom for themselves, the Congregationalists were not keen on granting it to others. They accorded "established" status to their own churches, and did not hesitate to use the power of civil government to achieve their religious ends.

Only Congregationalists in good standing were permitted to vote in civil elections in the Massachusetts Bay colony. Everyone was taxed for support of the church, and those who failed to attend a worship service were subject to punishment by the civil government. Sabbath observance was enforced by civil statute—the first "Blue Laws."

During the colonial era, Congregationalism dominated New England, while Anglicanism dominated the southern colonies. The revolution led to the discrediting and virtual collapse of Anglicanism, and Congregationalism emerged from the colonies struggle for independence as the most powerful religious body in America.

Congregationalists have placed their stamp on American life in many different ways. Their concept of democratic government is reflected in our basic political system.

Their harvest festival of Thanksgiving to God (which they adapted from Old Testament accounts of the Jewish Feast of Succoth) survives, in name at least, in the national holiday now dedicated to turkey dinners and football games.

Their concern for education is enshrined in such Congregationalist-founded institutions as Harvard, Yale, Dartmouth, Williams, Amherst, Oberlin, Mount Holyoke, Smith and Wellesley.

The first missionary ever sent out by an American church was Rev. Thomas Mayhew, a Congregationalist who started preaching to the Indians on Martha's Vineyard Island off Cape Cod in 1641. A few years later another Congregationalist missionary, Rev. John Eliot, translated the Bible into the language of the Algonquin Indians. It was the first Bible printed in the American colonies.

In 1957 the Congregational Christian churches merged with the Evangelical and Reformed Church, a Calvinist body formed during the colonial era by German and Dutch immigrants to Pennsylvania. The new denomination is called the United Church of Christ. With a membership of more than 2 million, it is the nation's seventh largest Protestant body.

PROBLEMS REMAIN

Catholics Eyeing National Council

U.P. INTERNATIONAL

The Roman Catholic Church is actively considering membership in the National Council of Churches.

The National Council as presently constituted is a coordinating body for 23 Protestant and Orthodox denominations with 40 million members.

Accession of the Catholic Church, with its 47 million members, would vastly enhance the stature of the ecumenical organization and give it a far more potent voice in public affairs.

PROBLEMS REMAIN

Serious problems remain to be worked out before the Catholic Church makes formal application for council membership.

The biggest of these problems stems from the council's present by-laws, which allocate voting power and budget assessments among the affiliated denominations according to their respective memberships.

Thus a denomination with four million members has four times as many voting delegates in the Council's General Assembly and General Board as one with only 1 million members. It also pays four times as large a share of the council's operating expenses.

This system worked satisfactorily so long as the Council's biggest affiliate was the 10-million member United Methodist Church.

But if the same proportional representation and assessment formula were applied, the Catholic Church would hold a clear majority of the votes in all council bodies, and also would pay more than half of its budget.

WRONG SOLUTION

Both Catholic and Protestant leaders feel that this would be an unacceptable situation.

One possible solution might be amendment of the council's by-laws to provide that no single religious body, regardless of size, could have more than one fourth of the total voting power or bear more than one fourth the total expense.

This limitation would not expose the Catholic Church to any serious risk of being outvoted on key issues by a solid Protestant bloc, because in actual practice, the Council always seeks an overwhelming consensus on major decisions. Lacking any power to force its decisions upon affiliates, it obviously is in no position to make important policies on the basis of closely-divided votes.

A joint working group, representing the Council and the U. S. Catholic hierarchy, has been formed to thresh out the organizational difficulties. It will begin work in New York April 8. Dr. John Coventry Smith, moderator of the United Presbyterian Church, will head the council representatives, and Archbishop John Carberry of St. Louis will head the Catholic representatives.

LONG NEGOTIATIONS

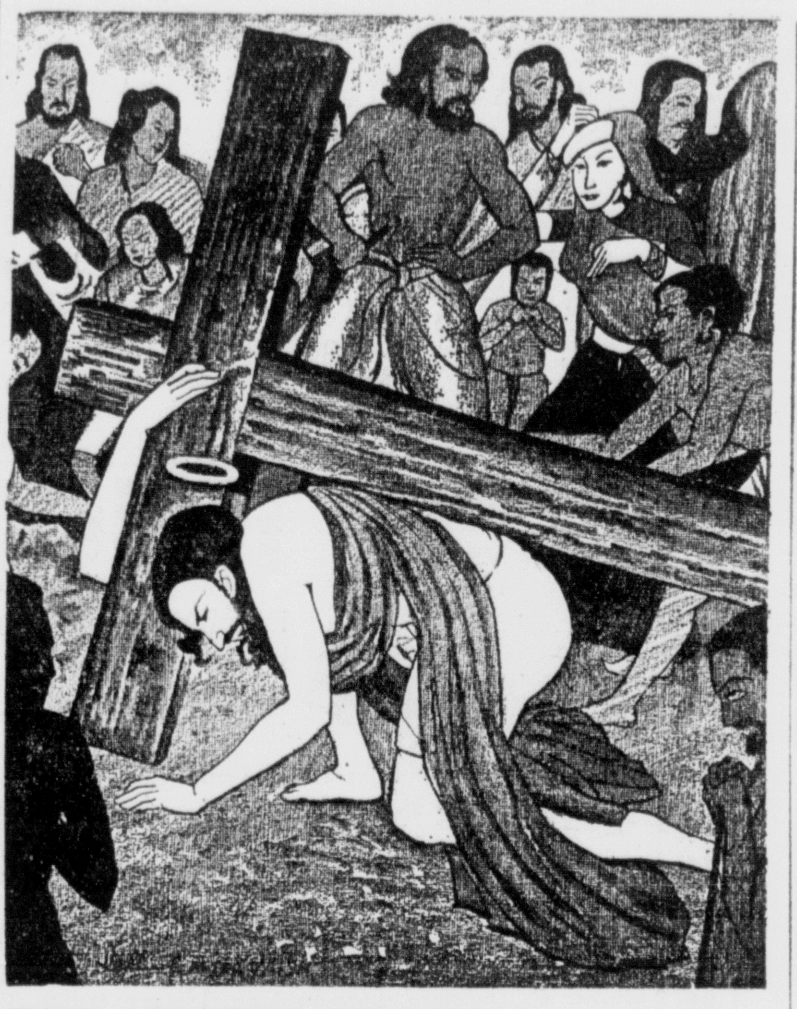
Since both sides prefer to make haste slowly on this significant ecumenical break-through, the negotiations may continue for two or three years.

Although no one is willing to predict exactly what form it will take, key people on both sides are confident the talks will lead ultimately to some kind of official organic relationship between the Catholic Church and the National Council of Churches.

Similar exploratory talks are underway, on the global level, between the Vatican and the World Council of Churches.

Catholic dioceses recently have affiliated with previously all-Protestant state councils of churches in New Mexico and Texas, and similar affiliations are under discussion in Minnesota, Louisiana, New York City, Kansas City and other places.

Thus the conciliar movement, which was one of the earliest manifestations of the ecumenical spirit, seems to be coming to the fore again as its most dynamic current expression.



THE LENTEN STORY

India's Christian Faith Is Re-Expressed In Art

By WOODI ISHMAEL
AP Newsfeatures
(Fourth in a series of seven)

Contemporary Indian Christian artists have inherited a tradition that goes 5,000 years back into the history and culture of India.

Christianity is a small minority in India but well enough established so that its faith is now being re-expressed through the art of India.

The above drawing from the painting by the Christian artist Vaish uses many of the ancient classical forms. The figure of Christ is painted blue. In classic art when a figure is painted blue, a Hindu thinks at once of the god Krishna who vicariously swallowed the poison intended to destroy the world.

This painting of the blue Christ figure, falling under the cross, makes clear at once, to the Indian, the meaning of the atonement, the death of the Son of God for the sins of the world.

HELEN HELP US!

By HELEN BOTTEL

Have You Ever Tried To Obtain The Address Of A Serviceman?

DEAR HELEN:

I was writing to a guy in the service and lost his address. Since he was going to be transferred soon, he probably was too busy to write a letter wondering why I didn't write, and now I'm miserable.

Is there any way you can find out a serviceman's location by writing to the Army or something? — LOST HIM

DEAR L.H.:

Getting a serviceman's address from official sources is as hard as getting an unlisted number from the telephone company.

If you know this fellow's home town (and it's small) you might locate him with a "please forward" letter addressed to the local post office. Or perhaps a mutual friend might help.

Otherwise, you'll just have to wait and hope for a letter. Meanwhile you might get another overseas pen pal through VIETNAM MAIL CALL, Box 3104-A, Columbus, Georgia. Send your letter to a serviceman inside an envelope addressed as above, and enclose five cents for mailing charges. — H.

DEAR HELEN:

What do you think about a father who would turn in his own son for smoking marijuana? My dad says this is the only thing to do, and he gives as an example the millionaire parents of a Pennsylvania teen-ager.

This girl received some pot from her boy friend, and her parents had her arrested. She got 18 months probation and a $300 fine which she has to work out herself.

Doesn't this action seem like Hitlerian days when children informed on relatives? I think parents could handle the matter less publicly, without humiliating the child and giving him a police record. Families should hang together, don't you think? And what do your readers think about this? — M.A.M.

DEAR M:

Families should hang together, right. But if parents believe a legal lesson is the only one which will take, then perhaps they should consult the authorities.

In next week's column I'll tell you about a better way—a visit to the drug ward at a state hospital. If all beginning "dopers" could talk to those who "have been" and are trying to make a comeback, we'd see a great deal less drug use among young people."—H.

DEAR HELEN:

I'm 12 years old and am afraid my parents don't love me. My friends tell me about the things they do wrong, and how they get spankings for them. But I have never had a spanking in my life.

The kids say I'm lucky to get away with stuff and not get spanked, but I feel — DEPRIVED

DEAR DEPRIVED:

Wise parents don't need to spank — they manage their discipline and training in more civilized ways.

If you are a basically good kid, stop worrying about your "lacks." (And you must be, or you wouldn't worry about them in the first place.) — H.

Virginia Graham To 'Crusade'

EDITOR'S Note: Virginia Graham, actress, author and star of the television program "Girl Talk," is the first woman in the 50-year history of the American Cancer Society to serve as its National Crusade Chairman. This is the first of two dispatches by Miss Graham, distributed by United Press International in cooperation with the society.

By VIRGINIA GRAHAM

ACTRESS-AUTHOR Virginia Graham, star of the television program "Girl Talk," is shown in a 1969 photo. Among her other accomplishments, Miss Graham is the first woman in the 50-year history of the American Cancer Society to serve as its National Crusade Chairman. (UPI Telephoto)

NEW YORK (UPI)—"I'm a better person for it."

That ancient Pollyanna line is just a joke. Whenever I hear someone use it seriously I wince. To me it's like saying—"Well, I've had the bubonic plague and my husband left me and my new mink coat was stolen but I'm a better person for it."

Maybe in retrospect it's possible to appreciate how a bad experience changes one for the good. But I defy anyone to tell me that there is anything good about a bad experience.

I KNOW because I had a bad experience. Cancer. I say had because I am cured of cancer— one of 1,500,000 Americans found free of the disease five years after treatment. Are we better people for it? Ha!

When I was told that I had cancer of the uterus I became a victim of paralysis, paralysis of fear. When I stopped being numb, I walked to a hospital window. Yes, I was going to jump.

OBVIOUSLY I didn't. It is hard to explain why. I had told myself that there was no hope, that the diagnosis of cancer was a death sentence. Why should I cost my family the suffering and all the money we had in the world when it wouldn't do any good?

So, I called my husband to say good-bye. Then everything I had been taught as a child, my darling Papa's belief that life is sacred, came back to me. By the time my frantic husband called the hospital and they sent a nurse to my room, the tide pushing me towards that window turned. I was able to resist the terrible impulse.

I settled down to wait for surgery, with fear as my roommate. Fear is the most horrible companion you can have. You know, you can touch fear; you can smell it—you can taste it. I know what fear can do. I firmly believe that many people have died from fear of cancer.

FORTUNATELY I encountered some of medicine's noblemen. Like my surgeon, Dr. Howard Taylor, now retired, who reminded me of Dr. Gillespie on the Dr. Kildare Show.

Came the day before the operation and I asked him if I might leave the hospital . . . to have my hair done at the beauty salon I had patronized for years. I explained that I wasn't a natural blonde. 'No one has seen me dark at the roots standing up, and if, God forbid, they see me laid out, it won't be with dark roots.'

He said to me, "any woman who feels that way about herself—I have great hopes she is going to be fine. Now, I'd like a nurse to go with you."

I UNDERWENT surgery with the knowledge that I was part of God, that God had created me in His image. He had allowed me to know what it was to love my parents, for having the experience of loving my husband and child and that now I must accept my destiny.

After surgery, I went through 35 deep X-ray treatments and never was sick for one hour, only a little timid about the experience. I had heard that you lose weight from the X-ray but although I lost over 12 pounds through fear in the week before the operation and a pound and a half during the operation, I didn't lose an ounce from the X-ray.

WEEKS LATER, my daughter, Lynn, who had been carefully shielded from the truth about my operation said, "Oh Mommy, you were so nice and thin . . . now you've gained all that weight back."

Just a final word about the technical side of my encounter with cancer. The very first time I went for X-ray treatment they put me on a table and marked my stomach with purple ink lines to show where to direct the rays. I told the radiologists, "You know, from the air I must look subdivided just like Levittown."

SO THERE I was at 36, cracking jokes an arm's length away from death. Was I a better person for it? Did I stop being afraid? Nonsense. A few years later my husband and I were in an airplane when its landing gear went kerplunk and we were prepared for a crash landing. I was every bit as afraid again. Surviving cancer didn't make me immune to fear or to anything else. But the experience explains why I am so proud to be the 1969 National Crusade chairman of the American Cancer Society.

Next: The Crusade and I.

Sewing With Wool Has Advantages

By EUNICE FARMER

DEAR EUNICE,

I am taking a tailoring course in our adult education program and our teacher tells us to follow your column for additional hints and instructions. She has also suggested that our spring project be made of wool, the kind that is not bonded. We live in a rather small town and I can't find a yard of wool that isn't bonded. Why would I learn more working with wool in the first place and also what difference could it make whether it is bonded or not?

MRS. R. B. T.

DEAR MRS. R. B. T.,

Hooray for your teacher, wish there were more like her and perhaps we could all get back to the wonderful wools that are so hard to find today because the market has been flooded with bonded fabrics.

You will certainly learn more about fine tailoring when working with wool than any other fabric. There are pressing techniques that are important and handled very different than when pressing other fabrics. You will learn the importance of "ease," shaping, and fitting in the finished look of your garment.

The quality of bonded woolens is much less desirable because the fiber content is not the same. The bonding process is used to hold this fiber together. Many women feel that because a fabric is bonded it doesn't need underlining, interfacing or whatever. This is not true if you want a custom look to your garment. I only recommend this type of fabric for "quickies," children's clothes, etc., but certainly not for a garment you are going to spend many hours of time on and one that you want to wear proudly for a long time to come.

DEAR EUNICE.

What is the best method for hemming those sheer, jersey knitted fabrics that slip and slide no matter how you try to treat them?

MRS. E. R.

DEAR MRS. E. R.:

Your question has been answered by a new product that we have tried with excellent results on fabrics such as you have mentioned. It is a net type product that adheres to brown paper and is almost invisible to the eye. You can apply it in three simple pressing steps and it actually fuses fabric to fabric.

If you use it for hemming these knits (you won't need to use hem tape, or any other type of finish) and you don't want the sharp crease at the lower edge of your garment, apply it about one-half inch above the finished hem and press to this point only.

It also works beautifully on neck and armhole facings that become so limp and curl up when you try to hem them. Hope this product works out as well for you as it has for us. Simple directions are printed every few inches on the brown paper for easy application. It is also washable and dry cleanable if properly applied.

DEAR EUNICE,

I made a beautiful Alaskine dinner dress this winter and wore it once. When I got it out several months later, my young daughter thought she would be doing me a big favor and she pressed it for me without saying a word. I could have cried when I saw it but didn't dare say anything since she was sweet enough to want to help me even though the dress actually didn't need to be pressed again.

Now there are iron marks on the entire dress as well as a sharp look at the hem and seams. Is my dress ruined beyond repair?

MRS. H. C.

DEAR MRS. H. C.;

I could cry for you since Alaskine (a mixture of silk and worsted) needs very little pressing even in the beginning construction. It should be pressed very lightly (always on the wrong side) with a steam iron and for a very expensive look, it should look almost as if it hadn't been pressed at all.

I have only one suggestion besides saying a few prayers! Take it to your favorite dry cleaners and hope they can repress it and bring it back closer to its original look. I would remove the hem first so that it could be pressed out since that would only take a few minutes to put in again. Don't expect miracles, but you may at least be able to wear it again.

Sportswear Designed For Rugged Country

By LINDA DEUTSCH

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — In the rugged country of the Pacific Northwest, where women aren't afraid to climb a mountain or explore a rocky trail now and then, sportswear isn't a luxury—it's necessity.

Today, with a backdrop of pine trees and snowcapped mountains, Oregon's sportswear manufacturers begin showing off their line for next fall, a collection of clothes aimed at sports oriented women, and some men too.

The fashion symposium titled "A Breath of Fresh Air" brings together three fashion houses who have operated for dozens of years on the principal that a woman, whether sailing, camping, hiking or skiing down a slope, can be as glamorous as a gal in an evening gown.

Jantzen opened the fashion show with a parade of misses casuals stressing the indispensible staple of a casual wardrobe—pants.

With the advent of flared pants, a more feminine look, Jantzen shows 22 different styles so a lady can choose to have her pants almost skirt-wide or have them conservatively tailored to hit the tops of her shoes.

The look with pants continues to be vests, the longer the better. The tunic gets a new twist for fall; it's shaped into a tiny sashed minidress that can be popped over slacks in chill weather, or worn by itself in the spring.

Following on the fashion runways were Pendleton Woolen Mills, parading dapper designs in men's sportswear to match the dashing town and country look in women's togs. The show revealed fashion's newest interpretation of the tweedy look in suits and coats.

White Stag, a company which made sails before it started making sailing clothes, revealed the latest look in an expanding fashion field—ski clothes. On the snowy slopes of Mt. Hood, White Stag will present warm, colorful, kicky ski clothes which should inspire even the nonathletic ladies to head for the hills.

Fall Nuptials Planned By Pair

Carole Jean Hansen's engagement to John Joseph Elu has been announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence J. Hansen of Petaluma.

The future bride is a senior at Petaluma High School, and her fiance is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Elu of Petaluma.

Aug. 24 nuptials are planned by the couple.

Powdered Milk

To make pennies go further, use powdered nonfat milk, University of Michigan dietitians suggest. Mix a pitcher and chill overnight before using. To make it richer, mix with one half skim or whole milk.

Vassar Adopts New Dorm Policy

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y. (AP) — A new policy at Vassar College will allow men in women's dormitory rooms at any hour of day or night, except rooms in specified corridors for girls who object to the idea. The off-limits corridors will be decided by a majority-vote "local option."

Ginger Ryan, 19, a New York City sophomore and a member of the Student Senate, said Vassar's women were overwhelmingly in favor of lifting the restrictions on weekend male visits.

Miss Ryan said a few girls remained opposed. "They are only a small number and they have decided to move into areas where visiting hours will be restricted," she said.

Previously, male visitors were permitted only from noon to 7 p.m. weekdays and noon to 11 p.m. weekends.

At Brown University Providence, R.I., a special housing committee recommended that men and women be housed in the same dormitories on different floors during the next academic year.

The committee at the Ivy League school was composed of six students, two faculty members, two alumni, two trustees and two other members.

It said coeducational housing would provide an atmosphere in which "a fuller exchange of ideas, with a larger segment of the university community, could take place."

The reaction to Vassar's new rule was varied on the campus of the exclusive school—an allgirl institution until the arrival last month of 80 male exchange students.

"I wouldn't be intimidated walking out of my room in my night clothes," said Lita Lepie, 21, a junior from Brookline, Mass. "I have seen boys in their night clothes and we all have brothers and sisters and shouldn't be shocked."

The college president, Dr. Alan J. Simpson, could have overruled the new regulation, passed by the Student Senate. He chose not to and sent a letter to parents of Vassar girls explaining that students should have the right to govern themselves.

One parent disagreed, filed for and got a state court injunction against the relaxed rule. The injunction was lifted Friday.

Males who come to Vassar dorms without someone to meet them, however, will be left contemplating the outer doors—not walking upstairs with an introduction on the tip of their tongues.

As Simpson told the young ladies, the 108-year-old liberal arts college was not going into "the business of running an unregulated hotel for the benefit of guests ... I will say to you very frankly that we cannot afford the presumption that every young man with an eager desire to know a Vassar girl better can come up here with a bedroll and set himself up in your rooms."

President Predicts Decrease In Colleges

ST. LOUIS (UPI)—The Very Rev. Paul C. Reinert, president of St. Louis University, predicts enrollments of private colleges and universities will decline within the next 10 years from one-third to one-fifth of total college enrollment.

Father Reinert said private colleges are unable to compete financially with state institutions and some private schools may have to "revert from private to public status."

Father Reinert said the private institutions have "freedom to experiment and innovate" and he added that, if the private schools do not receive financial aid, "this nation will end up with a monolithic system of higher education, one that will be highly resistant to change."

St. Louis University has been forced to close its School of Dentistry and its Department of Geology because of lack of support. The Geology Department will be closed in June, and the Dental School will close after the 1970-71 academic year.

The University News said in a recent editorial: "Because of the financial difficulties involved in operating a private university, it is reasonable to assume that the best policy is one of specialization of study—offering a limited number of really good departments rather than a large number of mediocre ones."

July Nuptials Set By Duo

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Valente of Fairfax announce the engagement of their daughter, Lynn, to Robert Sartorio, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Mario Sartorio, also of Fairfax.

Lynn is the sister of Ken and Ernest Valente and the granddaughter of Mrs. Lea Capovilla of San Francisco and Carlo Baldassari of Fairfax. Her schools are Marin Catholic High School and Dominican College.

Corinne and James Sartorio are the future bridegroom's sister and brother, and he is the grandson of Mrs. Cora Schweiger of Belmont and Mrs. Margaret Sartorio of San Francisco. A graduate of Sir Francis Drake High School, Robert is employed by L. Sartorio Concrete Construction Company in San Francisco.

A July wedding in Carmel is planned by the couple.

Students Put 'S' Into Association

By PATRICIA McCORMACK

NEW YORK (UPI) — Put an "S" in Parent-Teacher Association — for Parent-Teachers Association — and you come up with P-TSA, pronounced "pizza."

More than half the 43,000 units of the P-TA nationally are inserting the "S" in an effort to narrow the generation gap.

The "S" stands for students.

Impractical, you say. How could parents and teachers talk about teen-age problems in the presence of teen-agers.

For nearly a quarter century people said that and at the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, other people said something like "nuts." Translation: "Let's give it a try."

PUTTING STUDENTS in the P-TA was experimental for some years. Within the year the movement turned into a campaign that's caught on like the common cold.

Some of the payoffs:

With the generations talking together about mutual problems, each discovers that the other side isn't all square.

Adults increase respect for the judgment of those under 20.

More parents attend parent-teacher meetings. The reason: Students make meetings more interesting.

"THE FEAR that teen-agers' presence would inhibit discussion has proved groundless," according to a P-TSA report in the P-TA magazine.

At the "pizza" meetings, youth and adults talk together about anything and everything— alcohol, discipline, drugs, dress, education, employment, sex and even United States foreign policy.

Serving as a sounding board for students' ideas, adults discover the diversity of youthful thoughts. They also discover some facts about other parents' attitudes about common problems in child raising.

AMONG MYTHS dispelled by such sessions —"But, Mom, everyone's doing it."

Credit for the P-TSA nickname "pizza" goes to the unit at Boca Ciega High School in St. Petersburg, Fla., organized last fall. A student invented the nickname. Their meetings are "pizza parties."

Most "pizza" units charge student members 50 cents a year dues. The adults pay $1. But at Boca Ciega students chose to pay the same as adults.

EQUAL DUES, they reasoned, would underscore their equal standing.

As part of its sales talk to units that haven't inserted an "S" in PTA, the National Congress says:

"To deprive youth of opportunities to give help as well as to get it is to stunt their growth, to keep them childish. To keep them childish is to erect barriers to meaningful communication."

Jeanne is a graduate of Redwood and the U. of C. at Santa Barbara. He is the brother of Steven Airola and Kay Airola Mosbaugh. Mrs. J. C. Drake of Fresno and Judge and Mrs. Virgil Airola of San Andreas are his grandparents.

Couple Hurt In Cycle Smashup

William Alan Steele, 23, of Lagunitas, was reported in fair condition today at Marin General Hospital after the motorcycle he was driving hit a utility pole support cable and then landed on Steele and his wife, Linda, the California Highway Patrol reported.

Steele is being treated for a broken left leg. Mrs. Steele, 22, was released after treatment for a chipped leg bone.

Steele made a wide right turn from Sir Francis Drake Boulevard onto the San Geronimo-Nicasio Road and lost control of his cycle Thursday, officers reported.

Sheets Among Items Stolen From Laundry

Sheets, pillow cases and towels valued at $49 were stolen from a laundry room at 220 Canal Street, San Rafael police reported yesterday.

Nina J. Lake told police she had put the items in a clothes dryer at the apartment house on March 6 and noticed they were missing on March 11.

down several times during the session, claimed today, however, that the present "legal" government is still in office.

The noisy and often-heated debate attracted an unusually large crowd of students — numbering several hundred at times — as it moved first from the lawn outside the center into Conference Room A, then spilled out into the main hall of the center and finally moved back into the conference room.

Diamond called the session yesterday "a good exchange" and "really very positive" and said the students now are "all going in the same direction" towards getting fair representation on the student government for all segments on campus. "The problem is the mechanics," Diamond said.

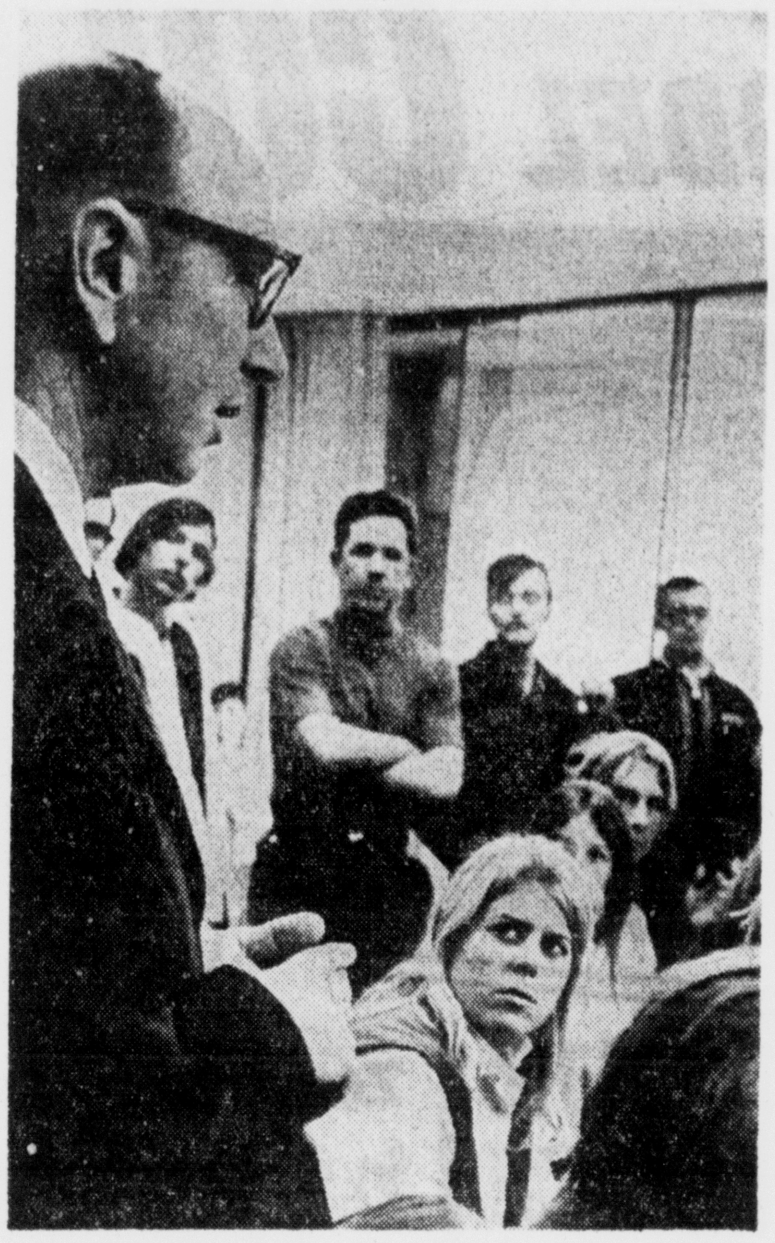
Diamond insisted that there are provisions in the school's constitution for a referendum if students want to challenge the existing government. Yesterday, trying to make the same point, he repeatedly was told to "Shut up —."

The proposed court action was considered by two student officers who refused demands to resign — vice president Harry C. Gilbert and parliamentarian Mike Beyries. They claimed that the so-called revolution violated the by-laws of the College of Marin associated students, a legal corporation, therefore making the operation of the college illegal.

They dropped plans to seek an injunction closing the college, however, after conferring with Diamond yesterday afternoon. Diamond said today, "There is no need for anything like that."

The interim committee appointed by "the people" to set up "free elections" consisted of two representatives each from the TWLF, the Third World Liberation Front Alliance, the Inter-Club Council, the Executive Council, the Black Students Union and the athletic department. The panel planned to meet at noon Monday. The Executive Council scheduled a meeting to decide whether to name an elections committee at 8:30 a.m. Monday.

Diamond described the interim committee as "self-appointed . . . (and) not legally constituted."



DEAN SPEAKS — Dean of Students Irwin P. Diamond tells students in a conference room that overthrowing the student government is illegal and the government should be allowed to dissolve itself and set up new elections. Diamond was shouted down a number of times during the exchange, described as "heated, but not angry."

LAW IN ACTION

From the State Bar Of California

U.S. Is Mighty Bill Collector

In our credit economy, lawmakers have made laws to help creditors collect bills and debtors to protect themselves.

But the United States is our common creditor. We owe tax money. When someone doesn't pay, Uncle Sam can collect his bill as no other creditor can.

Your tax bill arises from self-assessment on your tax returns, though the government may assess you itself. It may audit your books and deny some of your deductions, or add items you may have forgotten. Quite often, believe it or not, the government finds mistakes in your favor, and returns money to you.

Uncle Sam's collection weapon is the tax lien on your property. It exists from the time the tax is assessed. In some ways it is a "secret" lien; it need not be recorded, and few people know of it. Yet the lien is still on all property. The federal government can claim the lien or enforce it later.

The lien applies to everything — wages, life insurance, intangible interests, etc. Exemptions under state law such as homesteads do not limit the federal government.

If the government does not record the lien, the law protects mortgages, buyers, pledges, and judgment creditors. But other creditors must take their chances that an earlier tax lien does not give the U.S. greater rights.

In enforcing its liens, the government can seize and sell property, close up a business, or give notice and tie up property. If you buy out a business make sure that you will not have to pay the seller's delinquent taxes, federal or state.

A business or a taxpayer who goes broke must pay the taxes before he pays general creditors. Nor can taxes, unlike other debts, be discharged in a bankruptcy court.

(Note: California lawyers offer this column so you may know about our laws.)

Vehicles Held Smog Villain

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Most people think smog conditions are getting worse instead of better, and they regard auto exhaust as the primary villain, the Mervin Field California Poll reported today.

Asked about smog conditions during the past year, 50 per cent of the Californians surveyed statewide said it was worse, 34 per cent said it was the same, an only 6 per cent found improvement.

In Southern California 52 per cent felt things were worse, 33 per cent about the same and 7 per cent better.

The poll said 7 out of 10 persons put the blame on auto exhausts.

Hearing Is Set

A preliminary hearing for John Randolph Arbuckle, 18, of Tiburon, accused of burglarizing a Kentfield home Tuesday, has been set for March 24 in Marin Municipal Court.

Joint Human Rights, War On Poverty Talk Fizzles

A scheduled joint meeting between the Marin Human Rights Commission and the Marin County Economic Opportunity Council Thursday night turned out to be quite disjointed.

And the main purpose of the talks — coordination of manpower — got lost in discord.

Each group met separately at the county courthouse in San Rafael and never really got together, although they were in the same room.

EOC directors launched into a discussion of their own, wrestling with the problem of coordinating manpower training and development, while members of the Human Rights Commission waited patiently for the joint session to commence. It never really began.

After an hour of wrangling, EOC directors declared that because of their own "internal problems," a joint meeting was impossible.

The Human Rights Commission then opened its meeting, while most of the EOC directors drifted out of the room.

On a motion by Lawrence Mayer, the human rights commissioners declared that the best way to coordinate manpower training and development is to invite the 17 agencies involved to a workshop session with the county supervisors.

The Human Rights Commission also:

LEGAL AID — Passed a resolution indicating dissatisfaction with the termination of the neighborhood legal aid society after only six months of existence. Commissioner Mayer is to ask the Marin Bar Association to help obtain more funds for a neighborhood legal assistance foundation program.

HUD GRANT — Voted to support the Marin City Council's request for $25,000 matching funds for a planning grant from the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Synod Executive To Deliver Sermon

Rev. J. Davis Illingworth, executive of the United Presbyterian Synod of the Golden Gate, will be guest preacher at the 9:30 a.m. service tomorrow at the Novato Presbyterian Church.

After serving as general presbyter of the denomination's north coast area, Illingworth was elected to the highest administrative post in the new synod at its reorganization in January 1968. His headquarters are in San Francisco.

Annexation Idea Backed By Agency

The Marin Local Agency Formation Commission should continue its policy of requiring annexation of an unincorporated area to a city, when such annexation would provide otherwise unavailable urban services.

That concensus was reached Thursday night by the City-County Planning Council, which met at the Civic Center to discuss a policy statement on required annexations. The City of Novato last March asked for such a statement, pointing out that cities are vitally interested in developments just outside their limits.

Council members also agreed that future expansion areas for cities should be defined, and the cities and the county should have a common general plan such as the Novato and the Fairfax general plans. Once a common general plan is achieved, the cities should pre-zone to express city policy as stated in the general plan.

The policy statement on required annexations will be redrafted and presented for a decision at the next meeting of the council on May 1. The April meeting was cancelled because the first Thursday falls during Easter week.

The City-County Planning Council also:

NEW MEMBERS — Acknowledged the appointments of Peter A. Arrigoni Jr. and Louis H. Baar as representatives of the county spuervisors; Sally Garoutte to replace Richard Hiatt as a member from Mill Valley, and Robert Lagle as a member from Novato.

REFERRALS — Approved a policy statement on referrals made from other agencies, declaring that the council will deal only with areawide matters and will reject those which are purely of local concern.

TRANSPORTATION — Heard from Paul C. Zucker, planning director, that the first phase of the balanced transportation study will be completed in September this year, and the second phase in September 1970.

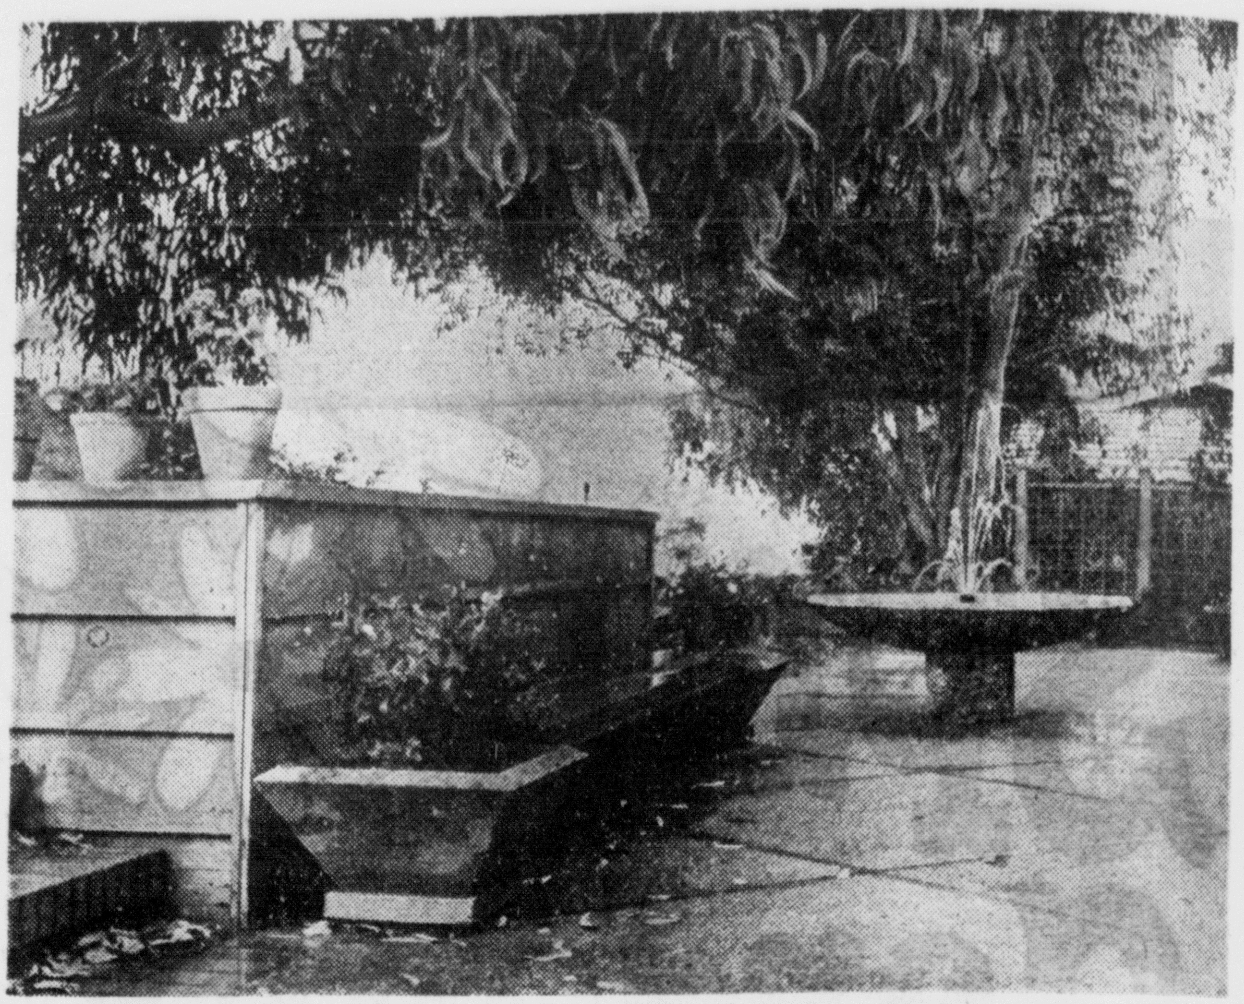
Spring Gardening Guide

After A Wet Winter Comes A Busy Spring

Marin Gardeners Eager To Make Up Lost Time

By DON KEOWN



LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT Sidney M. Lewin had two handsome eucalyptus trees on his Peacock Gap homesite that he wanted to retrain, and a view of the bay that he did not want to obstruct. His solution: the trees were boxed within wooden planters. And one of those planter boxes also serves as a seat from which the Lewins can enjoy their vista. For there added pleasure, there is a splashing fountain.

The winter now coming to a close has been a "washout" from the standpoint of Marin County gardeners and the nursery trade.

Rains almost every weekend, and frequently on the week days as well, have kept even the county's most ardent gardeners indoors, although the winter season with its bareroot shrubs and trees, bulbs, perennials, etc., is usually a busy planting time in Marin.

But now, with spring coming on, nurserymen expect the gardening business to "go like crazy."

Prevented too long from indulging in their favorite hobby, the gardeners of Marin County will be out to make up for lost time. Planting and other chores that could not be done in the saturated soil will be crammed into the upcoming weekends when the earth will again be workable.

FURTHERMORE, there will be a considerable amount of replacement planting to be done this spring.

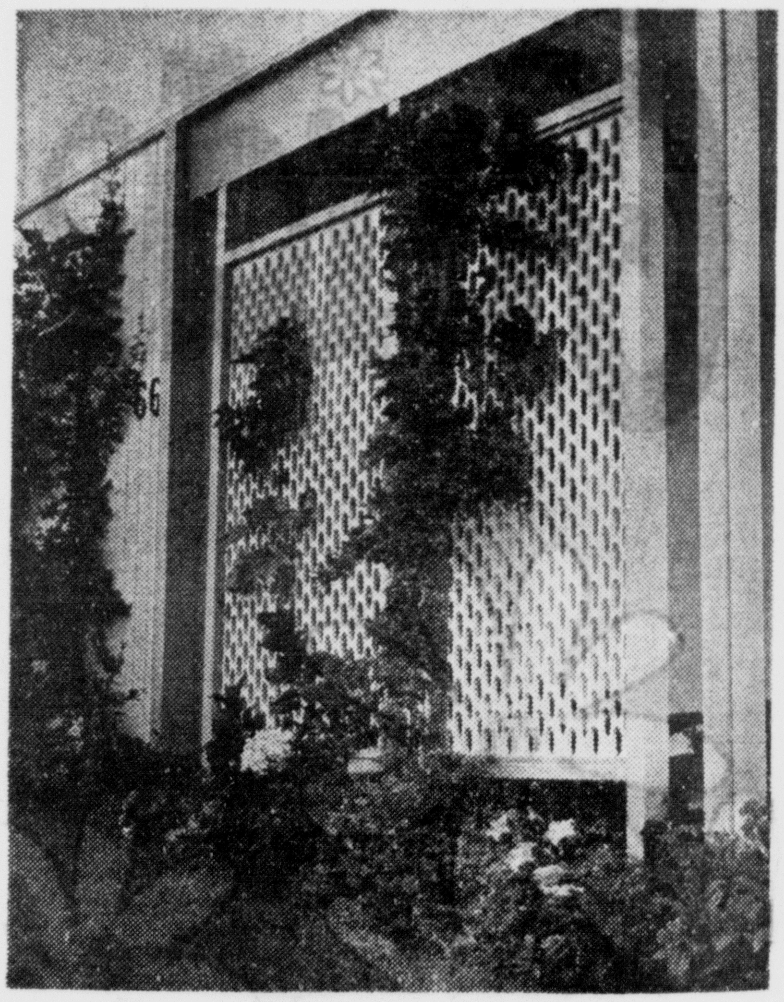
Losses of plantings were heavy during the wet winter. Gardeners who planted shrubs, trees or flowers improperly, or in poorly drained locations, have paid a stiff price in lost specimens. Now new ones, better planted this time, it is to be hoped, will have to go into the ground to replace them.

This is why the nursery trade is looking forward eagerly to the weeks ahead to offset the doldrums of the weeks now behind them.

IT IS A million-and-a-quarter-dollar business in Marin that we are talking about. To be exact, it is a $1,266,550 business. Or it was in 1968.

You get that figure by adding the $541,350 gross worth of nursery stock grown for wholesale in Marin County in 1968 to the $725,200 worth of business done by licensed retail plant outlets in the county last year.

Both figures, Marin County Agricultural Commissioner R. Allan Ballard notes, represent gains over 1967.



WHILE THE LEWIN landscape was carefully planned one, it was also simple to execute. Just the right number of well chosen plantings provide the needed color. And screens and climbing plants insure the privacy of the occupants. (Photos by G. L. Koch)

In 1967, the gross value of nursery stock grown in the county for wholesale purposes was $531,100. The retail sales total for licensed nurseries was $690,700.

THE NURSERY stock valuation figure represents a continuation of a gain trend, since the 1966 figure was only $508,000. But the retail nursery sales total marks a reversal of a decline (the 1967 aggregate was $690,700), and a move back in the direction of $767,000 figure recorded in 1966. And in 1965 the figure was a whopping $852,000.

Actually, as Ballard points out, the figures do not indicate anything like the total economic impact that the nursery trade and gardening have in the county. The retail sales report applies only to the 90 some licensed outlets that handle outdoor-type plants. Not covered are florist shops, super markets, etc., that restrict their business to indoor decorative plants and cut flowers.

Tools and chemicals, for which Marinites expend tremendous sums, are not reflected in the figures.

THE WELL over $500,000 price tag fixed on nursery crops grown in the county for wholesaling covers such plants as orchids (the major nursery stock crop of the county in dollar value with the Niven Orchid Co. of Larkspur the principal grower), carnations, roses, lilies, heather, stock, living Christmas trees, etc.

There is about an equal valuation between greenhouse and field grown plantings, Ballard says.

While the extremely wet weather has played havoc with home garden and field plantings, it has had little effect upon plants in nurseries, since most of these were burlap-wrapped or growing in containers.

NURSERYMEN say there is no big developments in their trade this year in the way of plants or products. "Mostly it will be a year for the already proven and established things, rather than for new things," they say.

There has been some interest in the new roses and a few other new plant hybrids.

But for the most part, Marinites will be sticking with their old favorites.

BUILDING ACTIVITY, sagging badly in Marin County a year ago, is beginning to show some new life. And that means more landscaping activity as well. The general trend still seems to be away from Oriental toward a more Mediterranean landscaping scheme. This, in part, is dictated by the architectural styles in the county, and is also a reflection of the general emphasis upon Mediterranean furnishings for the interior of the home.

Whether it is the landscaping of a complete new garden, or the addition of a single new shrub to an already well established outdoor area, Marin gardeners indubitably are champing at the bit, eager to get started, ready to again get their hands in the dirt.

Like the nurserymen say, gardening is going to go like crazy in Marin County this spring, as "green thumbers" attempt to make up for all that lost time while the rains came — and came — and came.

Charm And Comfort In The Backyard

Weekends away from town — it's a wonderful tradition enjoyed by increasing numbers of families who own vacation homes, travel in trailers or campers, rough it in tents or head for the comforts of a rented cabin.

Yet many formerly ardent weekenders have become stay-at-homes.

Jammed highways, mob scenes at lake shore or beach, and campgrounds alive with transistorized radios have taken the "awayness" out of being away. Even supposedly inaccessible wilderness areas are becoming garbage dumps, say some outdoor enthusiasts.

SO WHAT DO the disenchanted do?

They set about making their own backyard a place of peace, repose and beauty. Vacation time then becomes any evening — and weekends are spent pleasurably relaxing in a neighborhood emptied of noxious noise.

Besides the traditional close-to-house deck or patio, these away-but-at-homers often build charming and comfortable retreats deep in the garden. Or they appear to be distant from the house, for the principles of Japanese landscaping are often employed to change perspective and create the illusion of distance.

THE RETREAT itself may be ever so simple — a rakish affair of Douglas fir posts and beams supporting a shade roof against summer sun and, for the floor a little deck of two-by-fours.

The garden retreat's roof may be solid and cedar shingled — but pitched to encourage air circulation. Or a lacy, trellis-style structure covered with spaced slats to filter sunshine could be the choice.

Always there will be benches built into the hideaway, again simple things of two-by-fours. These solve the furniture problem, keeping the nook livable at all times — no pre-planning necessary.

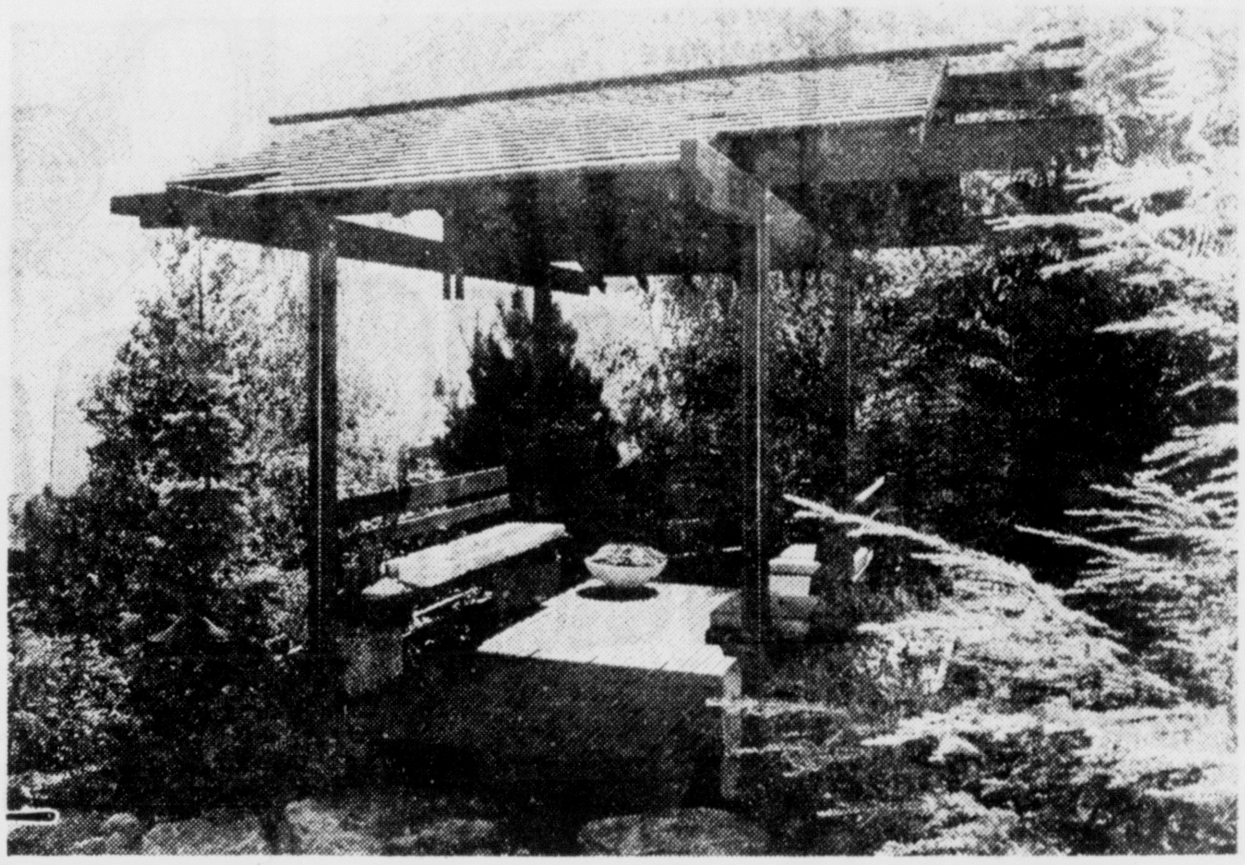
UPKEEP WILL be banned from the garden Shangri-la by the simple expedient of not painting any of the wood—posts, beams, rafters, roofing, deck boards or benches. All will be stained or allowed to weather. And the result will be highly attractive, appropriately gardenlike.

Low-voltage lights can be placed among shrubs to give the area special charm at dusk and through the evening.

Plantings around the retreat will be thick, lush, with a good variety of conifers included in the plan — fat, deep green pines, spruces offering bluish tones, regal fir trees. Broadleaf evergreen shrubs will be a staple, too, planted so that branches interweave.

AND DECIDUOUS shrubs will form an outer circle with low evergreens, ferns, heaths and heathers running back into the shaded areas.

Paths leading to the hideaway will wind through the shrubbery and around rock so that walking to it offers the adventure of travel, a sense of seclusion and the promise of enchantment.



WHEN YOU NEED a refuge, but can't get to the beach or mountains, a backyard garden shelter can be the next best thing. Imaginative design and thick plantings all around make this backyard gazebo seemingly miles from home. The structure is easily built with Douglas fir or cedar posts and beams, two-by-four deck boards.

A MOWING strip made of building paper and crushed rock is one of the most economical installations you can make. The drawing is from the "Better Homes and Gardens New Garden Book," published by Meredith Press. The same book offers other ideas for more involved solutions to the same problem, including bricks embedded in sand, so that they also serve as an attractive border for flower beds. Other flat-sided stones can be put to similar use.

A Book Of Ideas To Save Time

The emphasis in the new edition of the "Better Homes and Gardens New Garden Book" is upon attractive landscapes, achieved with a minimum amount of work and maintenance.

The 400-page ring-bound book has 775 illustrations showing how to have an attractive home — everything from planning what trees, shrubs and flowers to plant, to the care of lawns, shrubs, ground covers, flowers, vines and everything else that grows in your yard.

Here are some tips that can eliminate most of the "stoop" labor and cut gardening time:

Mowing is a chore most homeowners look at with dread. Besides being time-consuming, it is a chore that seemingly always has to be done! Power mowers have helped shorten the time, but there are still dozens of stops and starts during the mowing of any yard.

ONE WAY OF shortening mowing time is to have rounded corners in your yard. This cuts down on the stops and starts necessary to mowing square corners. You also gain a bonus of more freedom in designing other landscaping features such as recreational facilities or interesting garden areas.

Hand-trimming grass around the edges of paving can be eliminated if you keep the paved area level with the grass.

Mowing strips can make mowing a breeze. These strips can be very simple or quite elaborate. For the simplest of mowing strips, dig a trench six inches deep and six inches wide next to flower bed or other structures where mowing closely is difficult.

LINE TRENCH with building paper or polyethylene to prevent grass from growing under the strip. Fill the trench with crushed rock until it's level with the grass; tramp firmly in place. Besides being easy, this is one of the most economical mowing strips you can make.

A brick mowing strip is more durable, but it costs considerably more and is far more difficult to install.

Bricks embedded in a concrete and mortar bed make an attractive — and permanent — mowing strip. Bricks on sand also makes a good mowing strip. Dig a trench six inches deep; spread two inches of gravel and then two inches of sand for the bed. Use a small screed board to level. Lay bricks on bed and fill cracks with sand. This is also attractive — versatile.

RELY ON power mowers as well as other power tools. This is definitely time-saving! If you can't afford to buy the power equipment you need, borrow or rent it.

A home with a neatly clipped lawn and a well-cared-for look is attractive to every passer-by and can add a surprising amount of value to your home when you sell it!

IT'S WELL WORTH the effort to give your garden the special little installations that attract and please birds. Hummingbird feeders, left, can be simple, colorful holders of sweet water or more elaborate replicas of blossoms. Baths, center, are irresistible to birds in summer. And even if there's a pet cat in the household, you can still provide birds with a safe place, right, by putting the birdhouse or feeder on top of a pole or metal pipe.

Birds Make A Garden A Happier Place

The whole mood of a garden changes when birds come in.

There's more to see and more to hear. It's a more bustling, noisier, happier place.

"Ortho Lawn and Garden Book" published by Chevron Chemical Co., San Francisco, points out that a tiny bit of attention to food, water, and housing for your neighborhood birds can bring you a concert of sound and motion in your garden.

DURING THE cold months, natural food becomes scarce, and your garden's resident birds are easy to please. If they like what you serve them, they often hang around the feeder for the spring and summer.

Almost anything goes — wild bird seed, peanut butter, bread crumbs, fruit, and sunflower seeds appeal to most visiting birds.

SUET ATTRACTS downy woodpeckers, jays, chickadees, white-breasted nuthatches, robins, and others.

For birds that hardly ever get off the ground — such as pheasants and doves — scatter bread crumbs, cracked corn, or chicken feed right on the ground.

And don't forget the value of

A Little Food, Water And Shelter Will Bring In The Birds

plants with berries such as pyracantha, flowering dogwood, Virginia creeper.

WHEN WARM weather comes, it's nest building time. Birds show less interest in your feeders — natural food is now abundant — but you can encourage some birds to settle down and raise a family in a house in your garden.

Chickadees, downy woodpeckers, robins, nuthatches, wrens, bluebirds, and song sparrows are among the most frequent bird house occupants.

Cool, clear water is what all birds want on a hot summer day. Birds appreciate anything that drips, squirts, sprays, runs or holds fresh water. They especially like it — and need it — in areas where much of their natural supply dries up.

BATHS SHOULD be no deeper than two inches and rough on the bottom so the birds won't slip. They should have fresh water often in hot weather. And baths should be located near a fence, tree, or building where the birds can fly to, sun, and preen after bathing.

Coexistence with cats is possible.

People with cats can have gardens with birds, but they must make certain modifications. Feeder, house or bath can't be near a bush or tree where cats may lurk.

Place feeders on top of poles or metal pipes; add a funnel-shaped tin or wooden baffle to the pole to keep cats from climbing up it.

THERE IS NO herb more useful than the common sage, pictured above. Easily grown, it provides a taste treat in flavoring stuffings, meats, vegetables, innumerable other dishes, and in making teas. Sage plants grow to about two feet tall and remain at their best for four or five years.

Home-Grown Herbs— The Gourmet's Delight

Freshness is written all over home-grown herbs.

Anyone who has crushed some thyme and breathed in its fragrance, or savored the aroma of new-picked parsley, knows what we mean. There is just no comparing the smells given off by dried thyme or by store-bought parsley with those that come right out of the garden and into the pan.

The amount of space required to grow herbs is minimal. Pots will do the job for you, as will a planter box or a small corner of a flower bed. And you need not worry about detracting from a planting of ornamentals. Most herbs are as nice to look at as they are to eat.

Parsley, for instance, has long been a favorite with us.

We took a tip from the California Association of Nurserymen once and used it as a border to a small bed of annuals. From there, we tested it along a brick path and in a circle around the base of a tree. In a garden setting, it looks as fresh as it tastes.

Some Plants That Like Shade Best

There's Wealth Of Material For Those Sunless Spots

Choosing plants for shade is no problem, according to the California Assn. of Nurserymen.

There is a wealth of material available, from the low to the tall, and all do well in the shade garden.

In addition to azaleas, camellias and rhododendrons, there are numerous varieties depending upon their foliage to create a pleasant aspect in the garden.

Low, sweeping, ranch-style windows require the use of compact, bushy plants. A little plant whose common and botanical name is the same — Sarcococca —fits the order to a "T." The foliage is neat, small and glossy-green, easily kept under two feet if necessary. Short spikes of fragrant white flowers appear in winter, followed by purple or red berries.

PERHAPS, YOU will need a low hedge in a shady area of the garden. Use Sarcococca easily shaped and trimmed to your needs. It makes an excellent informal grouping in the foreground, too!

For medium-height shrubs in shade, look to the possibilities of Japanese Andromeda, sometimes called the "Lily-of-the-Valley Shrub" because of the trusses of white flowers held above the fine, tapered glossy foliage.

There is a variegated form of this variety with creamy-white leaf margins. It is more compact, and considerably slower-growing than its parent.

If your water supply comes in the "soft" category, you can use the aristocrat of andromedas—Forrest's Andromeda. The new foliage is a brilliant scarlet. From a distance, it gives the impression of a red rhododendron in bloom. The foliage is a little bolder than the common variety; flowers are alike.

ANOTHER medium-sized shade plant is the Skimmia. Naturally rounded habit of growth, thick glossy foliage and a profusion of red berries on the female plants are the shining lights of the Skimmia. They should be used in groups of five or more plants, with one known male plant to supply pollen to form berries on the females.

Your nurseryman carries a number of varieties of the aucuba, commonly called the "Gold Dust Plant." This reference is to the flecks of gold scattered throughout the leaf in many of the aucuba varieties. Others may be plain green, without variegation. Both green and variegated forms are capable of producing berries in showy clusters, but known male plants should be used in the grouping to provide pollen.

The aucubas may become as much as five or six feet tall. They are not rapid growers and maintain a dense, compact habit in all stages. Wash the foliage occasionally with a sharp stream from your hose—makes it sparkle!

BE SURE TO become acquainted with the Laurustinus, whose panicles of pinkish-white flowers can take the dreariness out of a cold winter day. The growth is generally upright, with very dark foliage. The Sandankwa variety has crinkled, rounded leaves, and a bushier habit of growth.

Laurustinus berries are purplish; Sandankwa's berries are red, carried just beneath the outer leaves.

They Call It Nightscaping

Soft Lights Lend Glow To Garden After Dark

A new word has been introduced to the American home scene: nightscaping.

It has been defined as "an illuminative, mood-filled complement to landscaping."

"Nightscaping and landscaping have the same aesthetic and functional objectives," says William J. Locklin, a Redlands electrical engineer who has turned a unique garden lighting concept into a suddenly flourishing business. "One simply takes up where, with darkness, the other leaves off."

Landscaping, of course, embodies an arrangement of lawns, flowers, shrubs, trees and non-growing objects that imparts daytime charm and serenity to an environment. Locklin construes nightscaping, in turn, as an effective utilization of soft lights, shadows and silhouettes to prolong the visual enjoyment of that environment into nighttime.

HIS INSTRUMENTS for creating after-dark beauty are a broad range of cylindrical or mushroom-shaped light fixtures he has designed and put into production as president of Loran Inc. Powered by just 12 volts as against the normal 120, covered or hooded, low key and glareless, they give wide latitude in the dramatizing of exterior features or the projecting of a mood.

They may be placed on the ground, attached to a wall, hung from a tree, concealed in a plant or submerged in water. They may accent a door, a window, an eave, a step, a walk, a shrub, a tree, even a distant view. They lend themselves to interesting experiments in such techniques of illumination as uplighting downlighting, highlighting, crosslighting, backlighting, vista lighting, skeleton lighting and underwater lighting.

Different from the typical floodlight, their function isn't solely to illuminate. They are designed to develop flattering shadow patterns and silhouettes, giving an illusion of increased width and depth to the exterior of a home, apartment or commercial building.

LOCKLIN CONCEIVED each of the more than 20 fixtures his firm currently manufacturers to fill a particular lighting need or desire. But rare is the occasion, he says, when pertinent use can be made of all.

"It depends first on the effect being sought," he explains. "Three to four fixtures may meet the esthetic requirements of one piece of property. Another may demand five to six and so on.

"It depends, too, on whether any safety factors are involved. Someone may want to light a step or a walk to avert falls by guests. Someone else might want to light various parts of the house's exterior to discourage prowlers."

LOCKLIN THUS raises the point that nightscaping has utilitarian purpose as well as one of nocturnal beautification. And the safety element doesn't pertain purely to unwanted mishaps or visitors. A 12-volt system opens new horizons in the safe handling of electrical fixtures.

Its low-key beams offer ample illumination. Yet, unlike a 120-volt system, it presents no danger of electrocution, or even electrical shock.

A child, for example, can remove a fixture's bulb and poke his finger inside without risk. If a 12-volt cable happens to be cut, there may be a spark but no shock. Connections even can be made under water without a tingle.

The 12-volt wiring is also remarkably simple to install, whether by a do-it-yourself home owner or an electrician. It can be buried a few inches in the ground, strung along fences or run up a tree without bothering with a conduit or protective cable, as mandatory with 120 wiring. Or it can be left above ground until a firm decision on the placement of fixtures is made.

A TRANSFORMER must be obtained to reduce the 120-volt current of the American household. If it is of modern make, however, the installer just needs to plug it into any handy outlet.

He then is ready to experiment with diverse approaches to lighting and the creation of distinct shadows, silhouettes and moods. He might try a light over a shrub, under it or behind it. He might try one under a tree or in its branches. He might try one or more on a fence or hedge to form a nighttime curtain between his property and a neighbor's.

He might try one in a pool or alongside it, reflecting on the water.

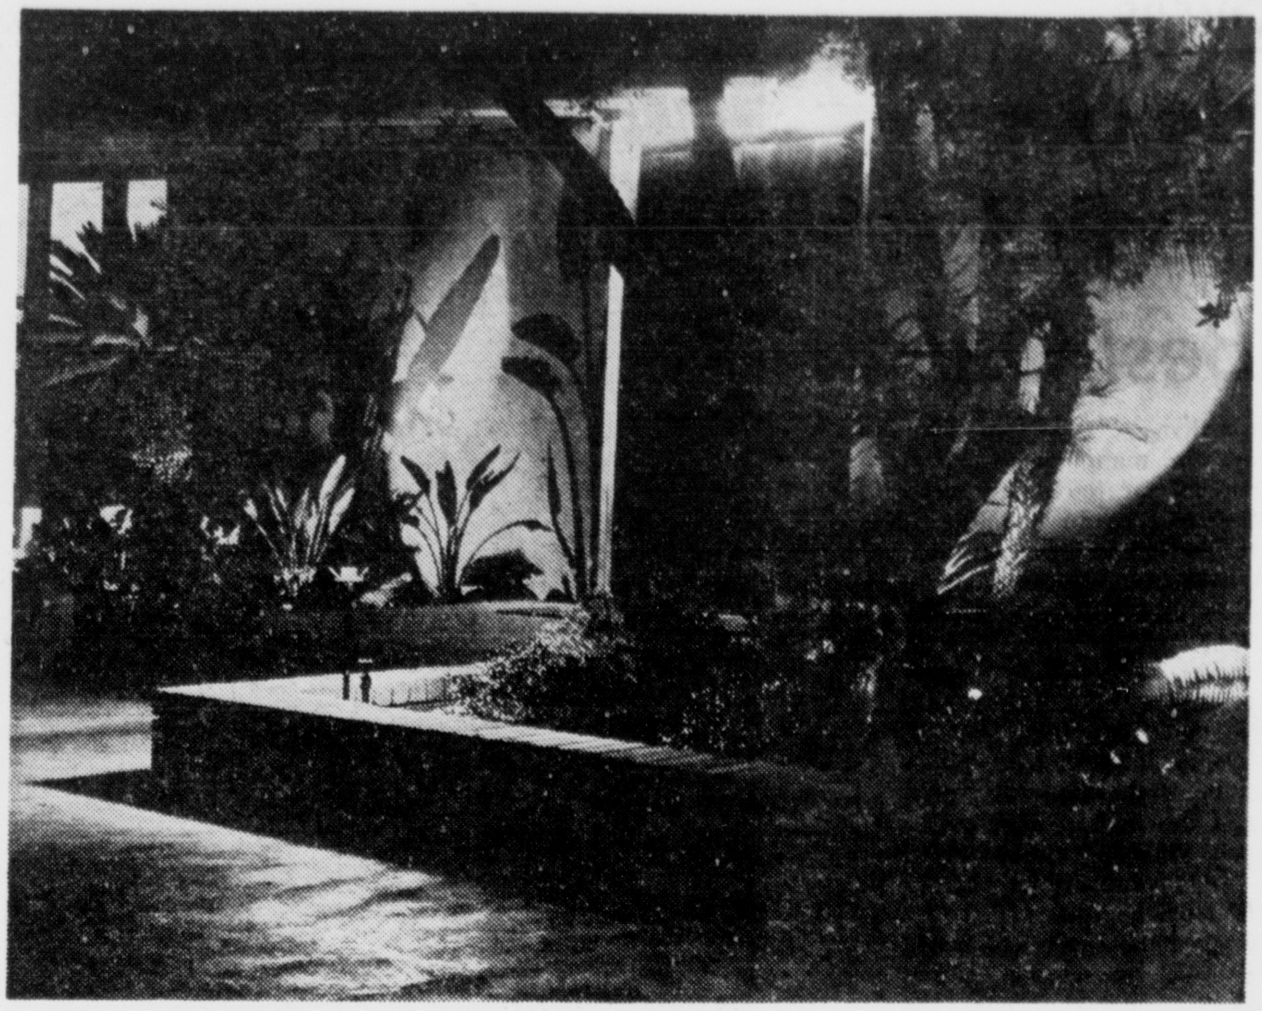
His opportunities to attain the spectacular are manifold. Locklin asks only that he adhere to three basic percepts:

FIRST, TO BE certain of the effect, that he do all his experimenting at night; second, that he realize better results will be achieved with, say, six small lights than two or three more powerful lights; third, that he always keep in mind this nightscaping motto:

"The effect is to be seen, not the source."

Terrace Combo

For an eye-arresting combination of plants on your terrace, try arranging clay-potted hydrangeas against the towering exotic foliage of a monstera philodendron.



LOW-VOLTAGE FIXTURES are used to illuminate this doorway and steps as a safety precaution. But the soft lighting also serves to create dramatic shadow patterns among the plants to add to the night-time beauty of the home.

Be Sure To Pick Best One

Groundcover can be the answer to many garden problems, but far too many home gardeners leap to conclusions when it comes to selecting their particular groundcover.

So says the California Association of Nurserymen, which points out that some groundcovers take heavy foot traffic and some take none at all. Some covers need much moisture, while others are quite drought resistant — and resent frequent watering. Some covers are sun-lovers while others prefer shade.

To select the cover which will meet all, or most of a gardener's special needs, the nurseryman should be consulted.

A MAJORITY of home gardeners want from their groundcovers a showy carnival of color, and with such performers as gazanias, periwinkle, ivy geranium, ice plant, lantana and Saint John's wort, this is possible.

Gazanias like sun and are drought resistant. Their daisy-like blooms come in the familiar yellow, orange and white — but recent introductions have orangish-blooms with darker markings that create a stunning sight.

A trailing variety is most versatile — filling-in an area while providing beauty with its grey foliage and yellow blossoms.

Periwinkle — both Vinca major and Vinca minor — are trailers. They have attractive blue flowers and thrive in all kinds of soil.

VINCA MAJOR is used widely on slopes and other problem areas, while Vinca minor is best in large areas, which because of location must be kept neat and attractive.

Ivy geranium and ice plant are common to Marin gardeners, but there is nothing commonplace about the spectacular beauty their blooms provide. Nurserymen have a good selection of separate colors of each available, and right now is an ideal time to plant them.

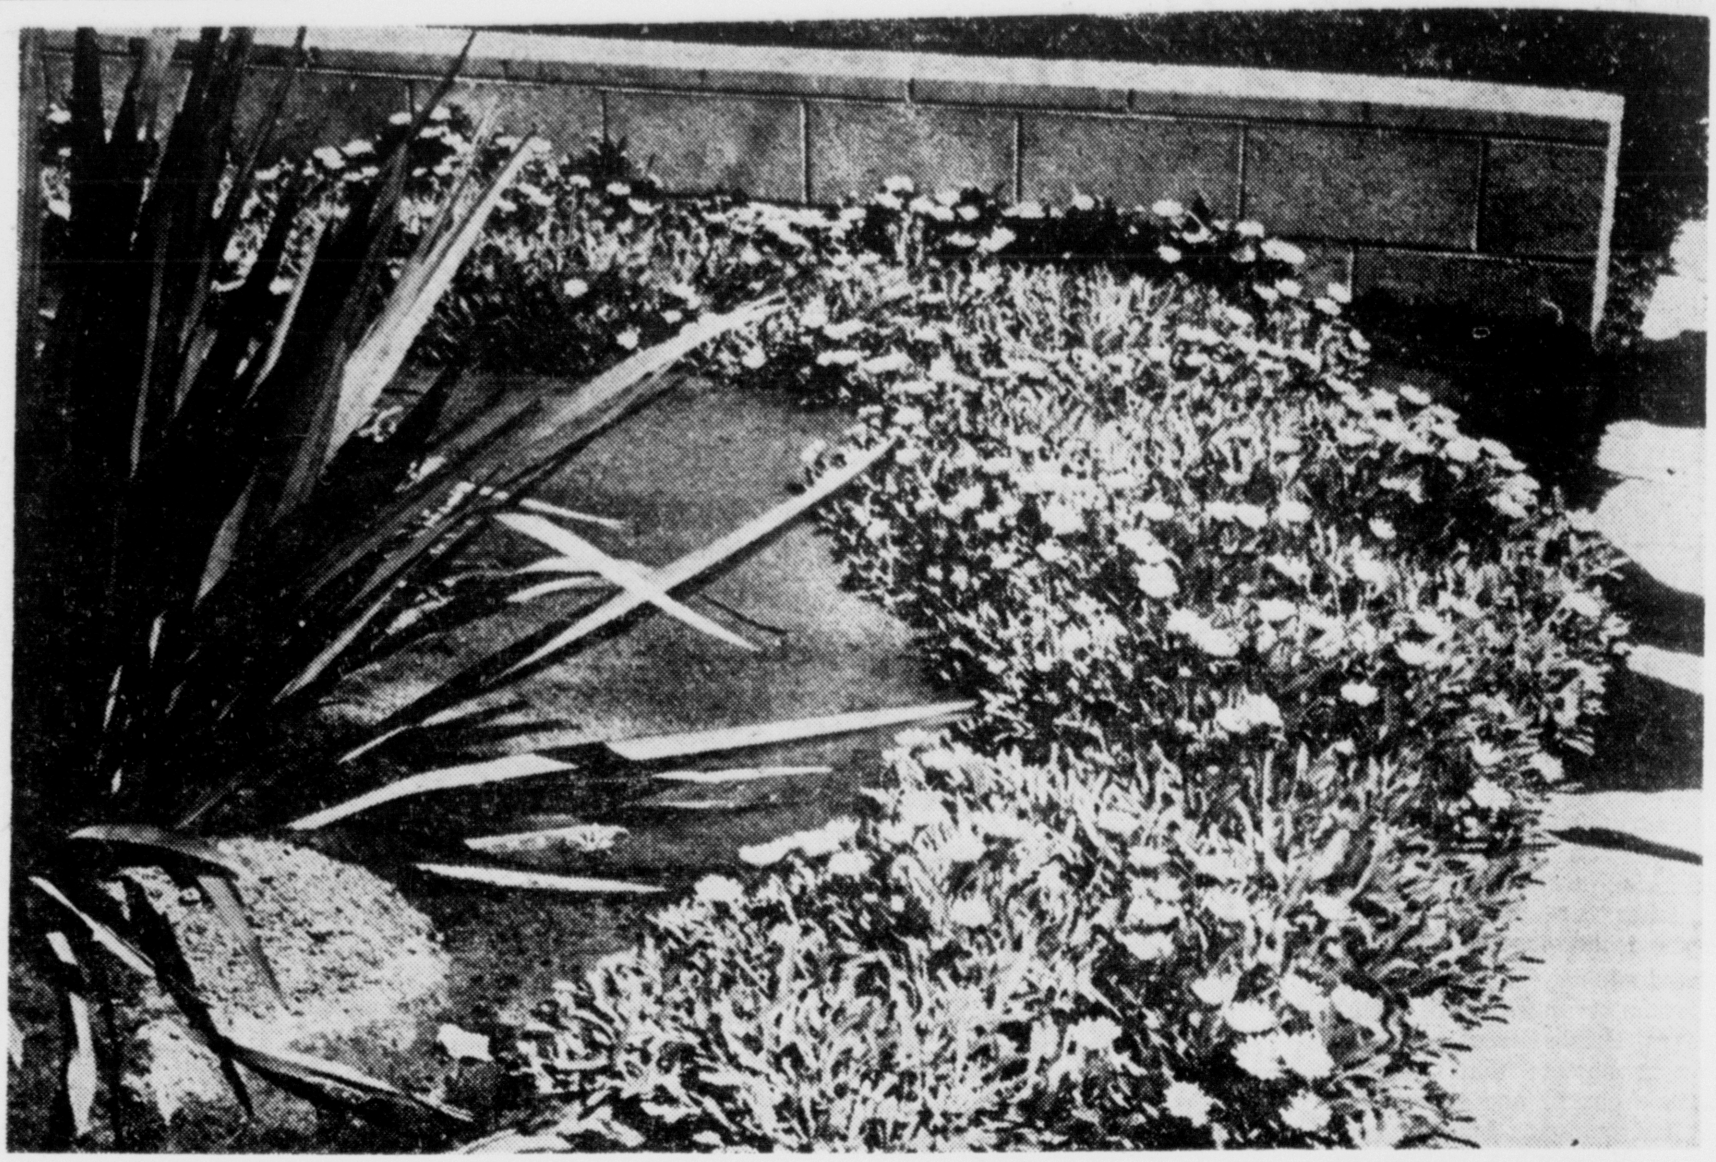
Lantana is available in bedding plant sizes, and nurserymen have a wide color choice to choose from. The continuous summer color sparkles throughout the neighborhood.

St. John's wort (Hypericum) is a durable plant. Its soft green foliage is appealing to the eye and the yellow blossoms — close-up or from a distance — are traffic stoppers.

THERE ARE other groundcovers such as yellow-blooming potentilla, verbena (available in separate colors), and ajuga that provide refreshing garden color; and are worthy of consideration.

It would be a disservice not to mention ornamental strawberry, or the many ivy plants that are popular choices as groundcovers. The strawberry is rapid-growing, and hugs the ground. Its attractive dark green foliage and its growth habit create a desirable texture to the landscape.

Algerian ivy is widely-planted in California and more and more gardeners are becoming aware of English ivy, Hahn's ivy, needlepoint ivy and other smaller-leafed ones. These are used extensively by landscapers to achieve special low-growing effects in the garden.



THE GAZANIAS are a colorful choice as the groundcover for a warm, dry spot in the garden. They are available in separate colors, and their daisy-like blooms appear throughout the warmer months. Pictured above is one of the more spreading varieties, suited to filling in an otherwise barren expanse with gray foliage and yellow blooms.

THE STRIP adjacent to a driveway is a prime example of the kind of problem area where a wisely-chosen groundcover can do a job for the home owner or his landscaper.

Marin's Fair Is Showcase Of Gardening

Ross Becomes A Mecca Of Landscaping Ideas

Weary of winter with its dripping skies, chilly winds and soggy ground, Marin gardeners are looking forward to spring with a special anticipation this year.

And the very rains that have kept him indoors in recent months will provide the Marinite with what promises to be one of the most verdant spring seasons in memory.

Greenery will be lush and blossoms will be heavy.

Those conditions present the gardener with a marvelous opportunity to achieve new heights in his landscaping this year.

BUT THIS ALSO requires planning and creative ideas. For help in that department, the gardener can go back to the 1968 Marin Art and Garden Fair at the Marin Art and Garden Center in Ross, which, with its "Bridges to Kyoto" Oriental theme was a treasure trove of tasteful ideas in exterior design.

There will be another Marin Art and Garden Fair in Ross this summer, July 2 through July 6, with the theme this time "In Old New Orleans."

Designer George Murata, responsible for last year's success, is in charge again.

BUT BACK TO 1968 and "Bridges to Kyoto": To help remind Marinites of some of the garden sets and ideas that won their eyes and their acclaim last summer, this special gardening issue of the Marin Magazine presents a portfolio of Ken Molino photographs of those displays on this page and the following two pages.

Study them, and then get to work. For spring is upon us. And you can rejoice with the poet Swinburne who said:

"For winter's rains and ruins
 are over
And all the season of snows
 and sins . . .
And in the greer underwood
 and cover
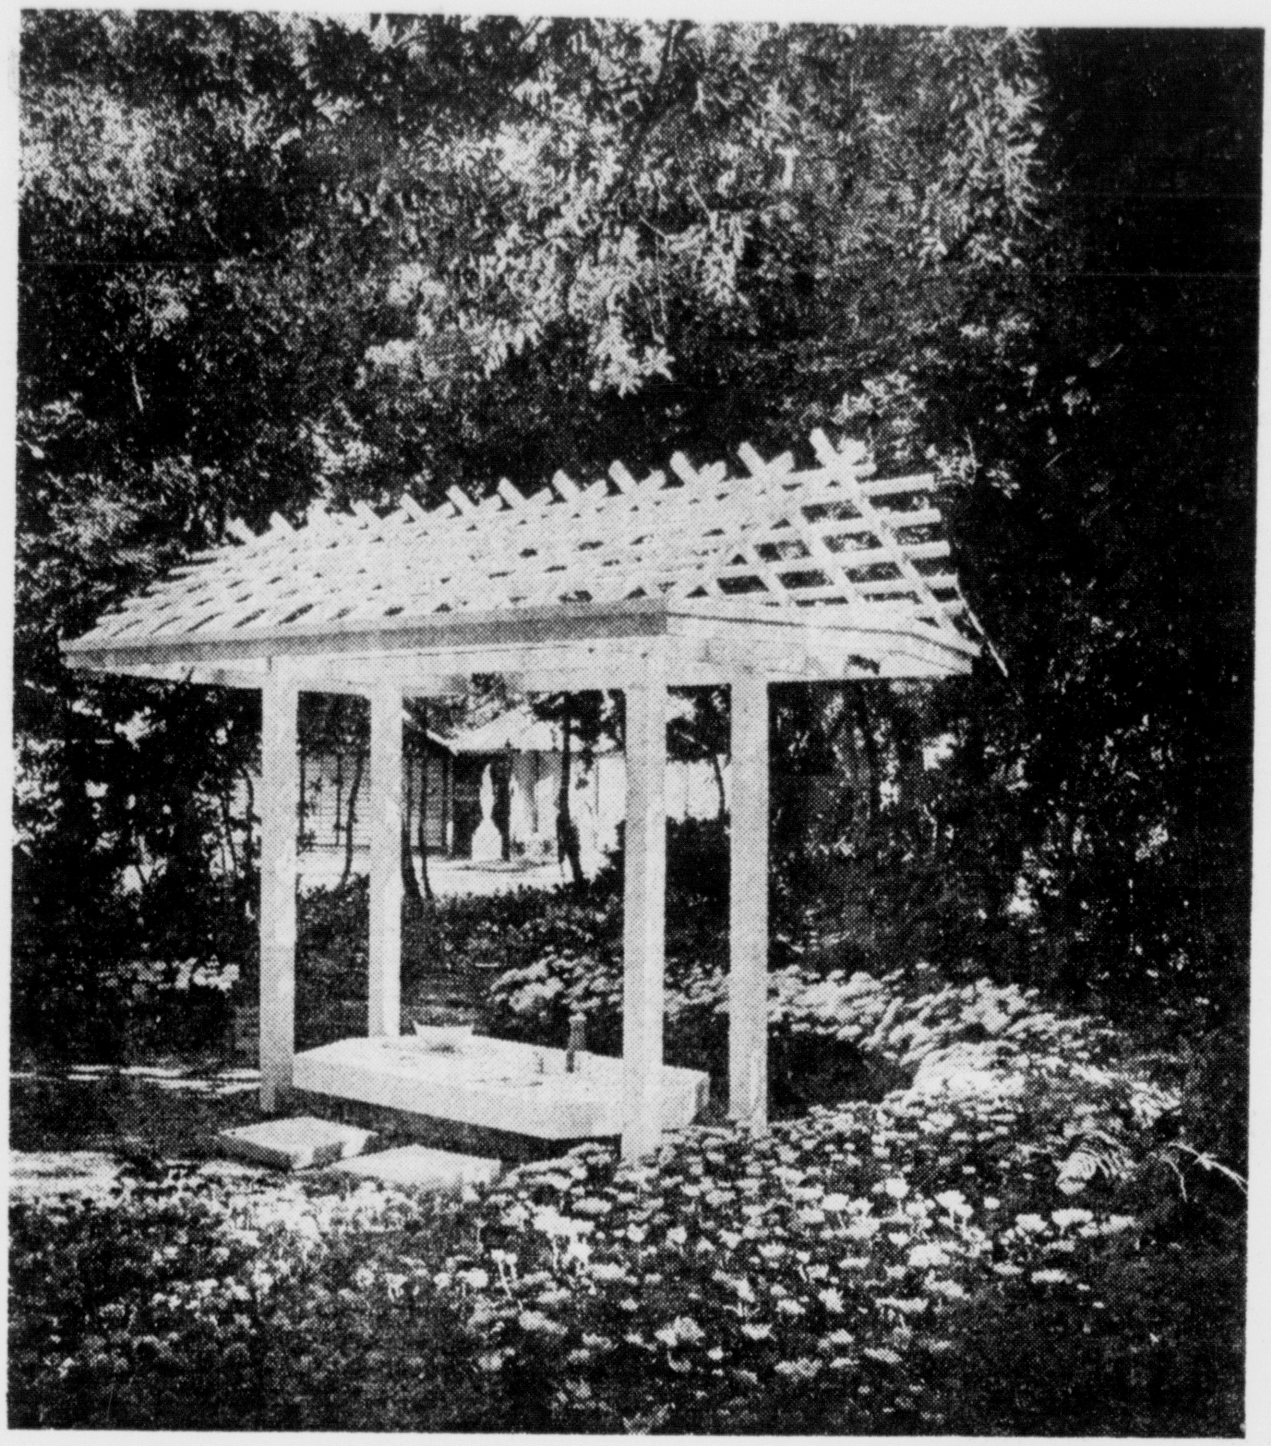
 begins."



THIS GARDEN STRUCTURE from the "May to September" category in last year's Marin Art and Garden Fair, is not, according to its creators, West End Nursery, particularly functional. However, what it lacks as a wind screen or sun shade, it makes up for in decorative value and in simplicity and compactness, should the gardener wish to remove it for storing or re-painting. The top, simply bolted together, can be folded up and stored or taken apart to repaint. The whole structure, minus the table, contains $35 to $40 worth of material. Dennis Untermann, its designer, points out that the small table beneath the structure is the same general shape and contains about $15 worth of material. Any flat garden area gains interest, he points out, by using an artificially raised planting section — such as shown here. The bloom area, all fitted in behind a header board, is raised above the patio, thus giving the patio a sunken feeling. The mass of blooms shown are chrysanthemums and sparky marigolds but should the home gardener not want to go to that expense, a mass bloom effect can be achieved by using petunias, impatiens or small begonias. To be most effective, this structure should be set among lots of trees and greenery and be brightly painted, Untermann believes. (See pages M18 and M19 for additional photos.)

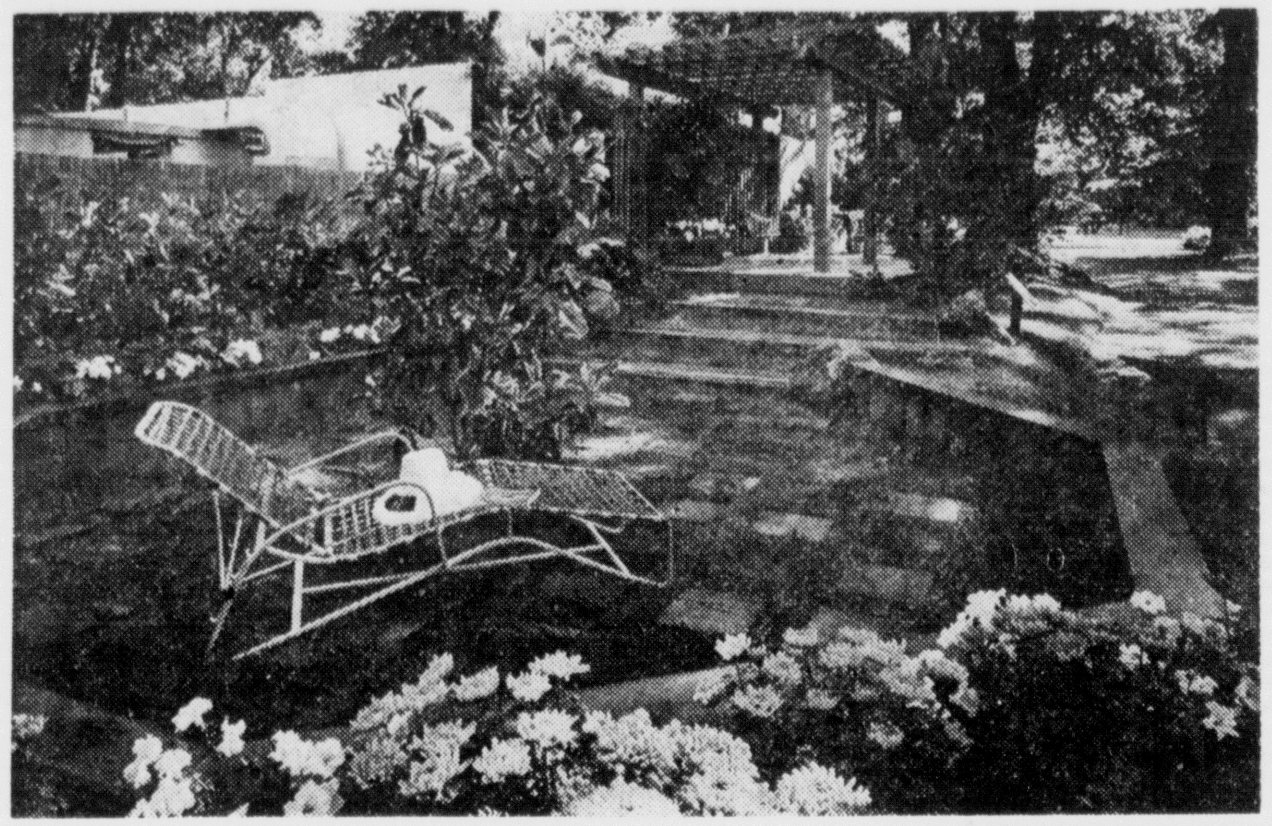
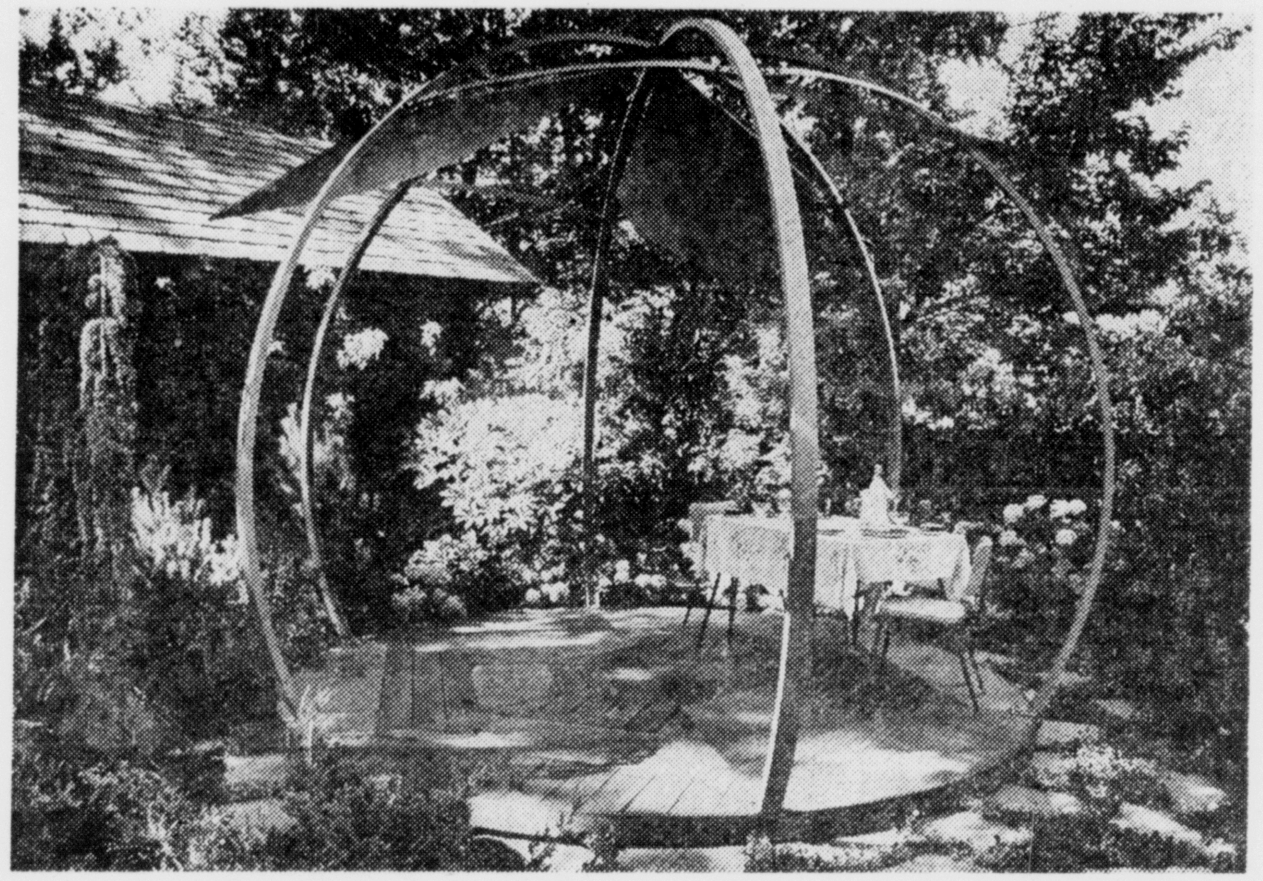
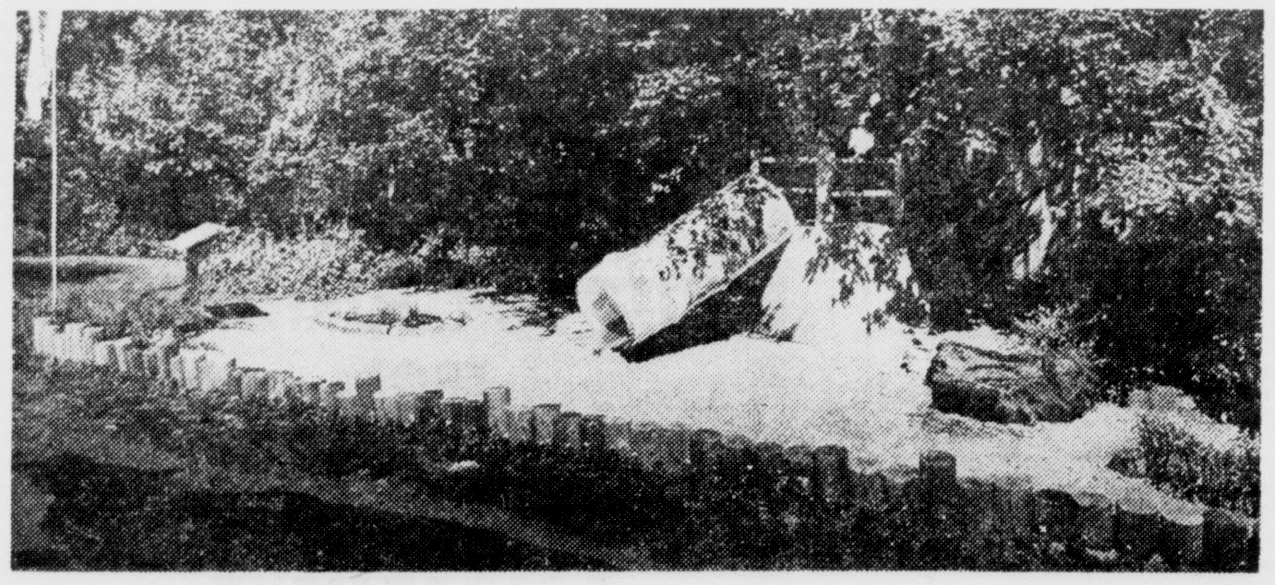
Some Ideas From Marin's Own Fair



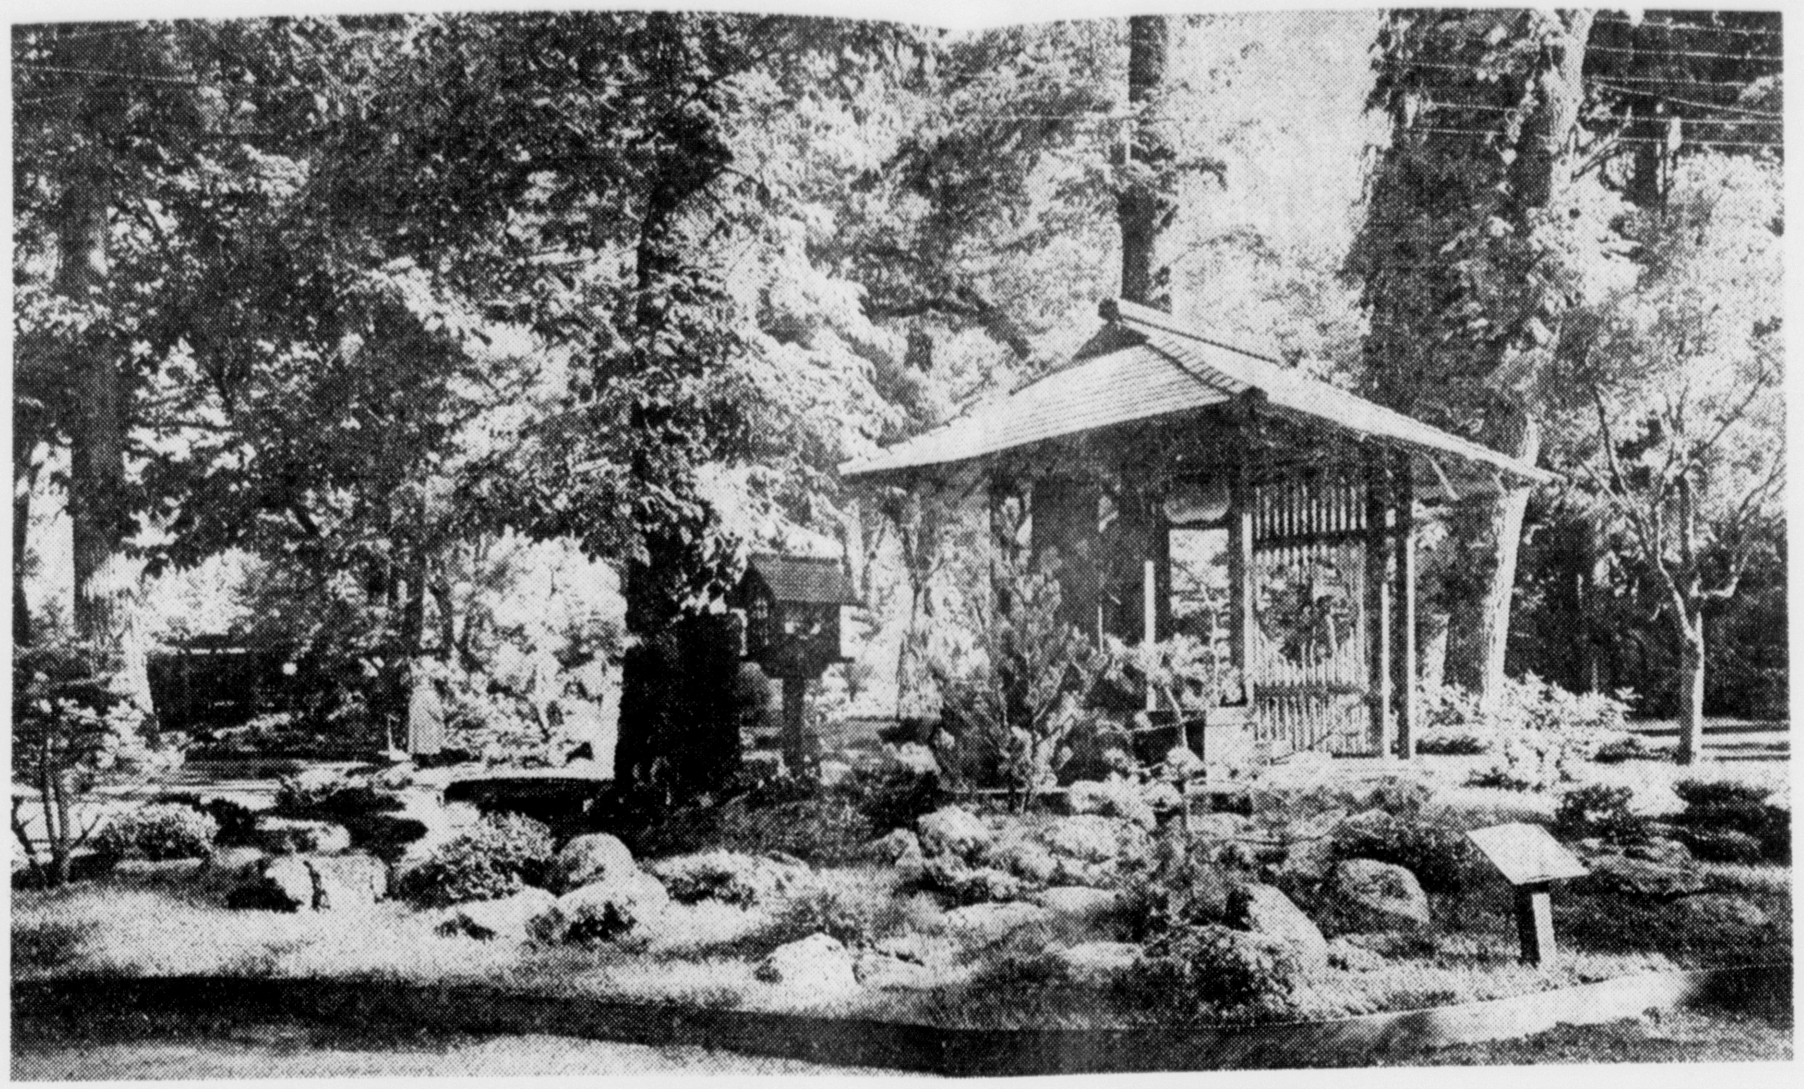
PHILLIP GRAY, designer for Cottage Landscape Construction of Vallejo, sees this treatment as a solution to the split-level lot problem so prevalent in Marin County. The steps pictured could lead to the upper level. The sunken area is made patio-like by the use of eight-by-eight-inch wooden blocks. While turf was used for the display in Marin Art and Garden Fair garden, the designer recommends diachondra. The area is enclosed by a low fence which is also used for seating. The surrounding area can be a riot of blooms with the only planting on the terrace, except for groundcover, a small evergreen.



SOMETHING RATHER elegant in the way of garden sculpture, doubling as a dining area, is shown here by the Santa Venetia Nursery. The structure, of steel and redwood, was designed originally to take advantage of the view in a Peacock Gap home breakfast area. That is why steel was used to give shape without confinement. The redwood panels on top are moveable and can be slotted-in anywhere, thus serving as parasol or wind screen. Color was introduced by the slate paving around the perimeter. The surrounding garden was designed for the person who wants to utilize the maximum blooming period. There are succulents for sun and hydrangeas for shade, roses and red petunias, as well as a great variety of shrubs.



A CHILDREN'S playtime garden, designed by Peter and Mary Mock for Pixie Parents, was dominated by this imaginative slide, carrying out the Japanese theme by using a fish for the play tunnel. However, it could be adapted many ways and even changed from time to time to provide a slide for preschoolers. Children are "play-in-water-lovers," so the yard contains a plastic pool sunk in the ground. In it are enough shells, grasses and floating things to gladden the hearts of small fry. The piece of driftwood is not only decorative but provides sitting space and climbing action. The unusual border is made by sawing off logs to desired heights.



THOSE WHO attended last year's Marin Art and Garden Fair will not soon forget the Japanese garden, with its delicate teahouse, by Kimio Kimura of San Francisco, directly in front of the main entrance. Fancy though it looked, the effect of a teahouse and typical Japanese garden, according to Kimura, can be accomplished without spending a fortune. For example, the teahouse can be built with construction grade redwood lumber. A plywood panel can be used for one "wall" and, on that, can be the artistic cut-out or a painted scene. An asphalt shingled roof, with its soft texture and old look, can be used. A hand-rubbed paint job gives an interesting weathered look. The Japanese garden is a great spray and pruning saver, as the typical ones do not have abundance of flowers. A few azaleas and rhododendrons, placed strategically about the teahouse and among the rocks, suffice. A small group of plants from the chrysanthemum family, can be placed near the teahouse for the color spot. A wood lantern, instead of the stone lantern, is actually more authentic for home use and can be fabricated quite easily. Rocks play an important part in any Japanese garden but they need not be heavy ones. Lava rock, red or black, as well as charcoal feather-rock, can be used effectively either singularly or in groups. Crushed rock, or water-washed pebbles can be used to denote water in or about the actual pond.

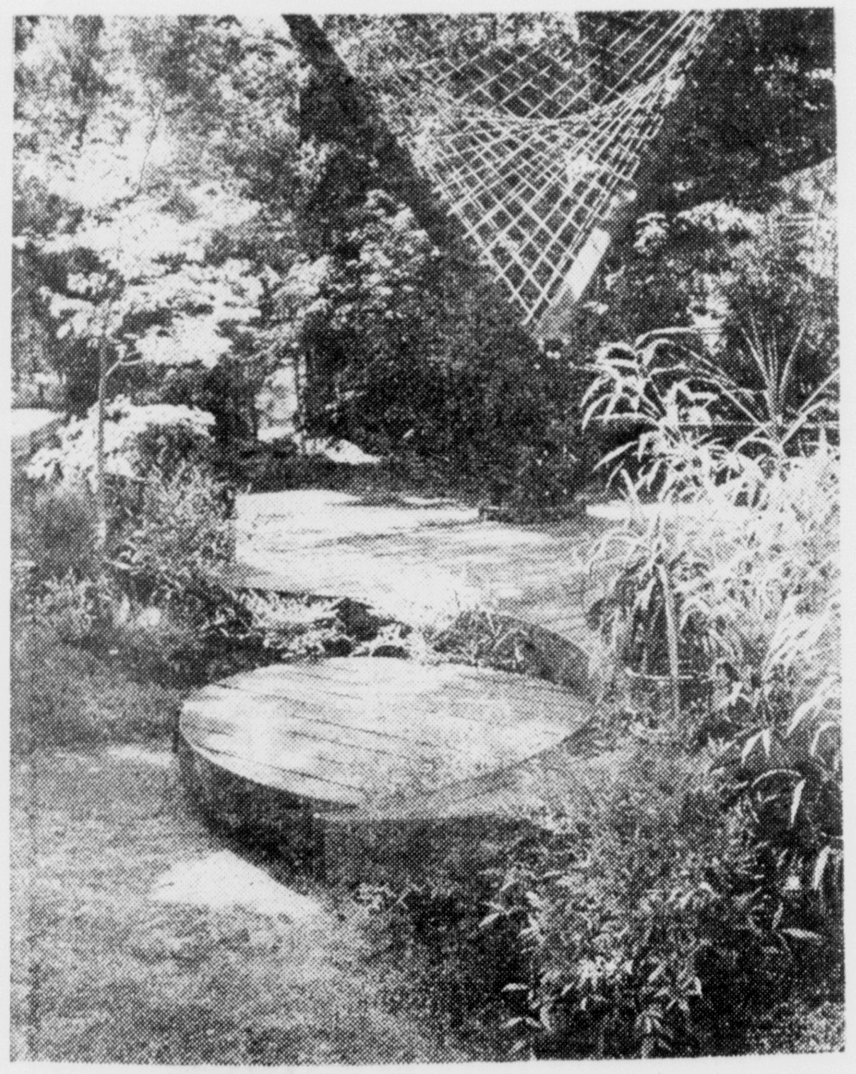
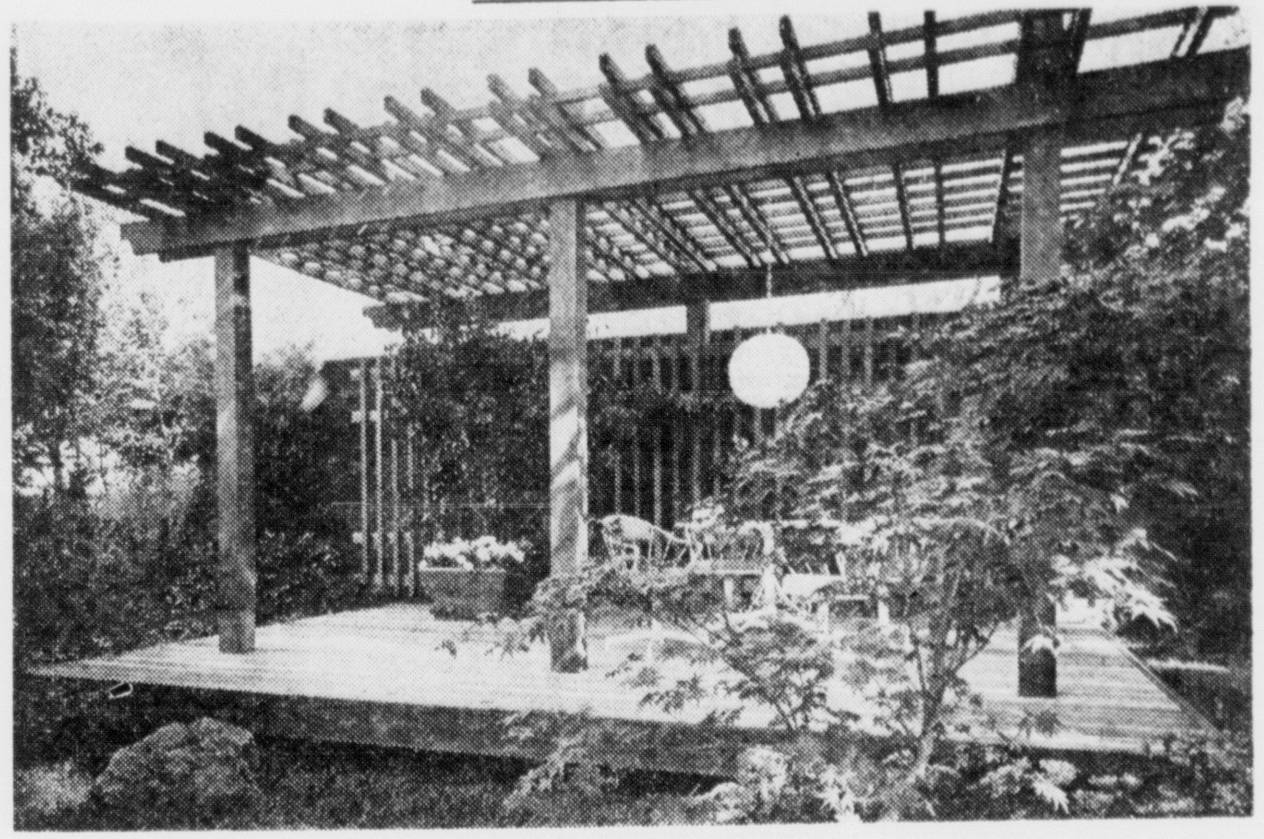
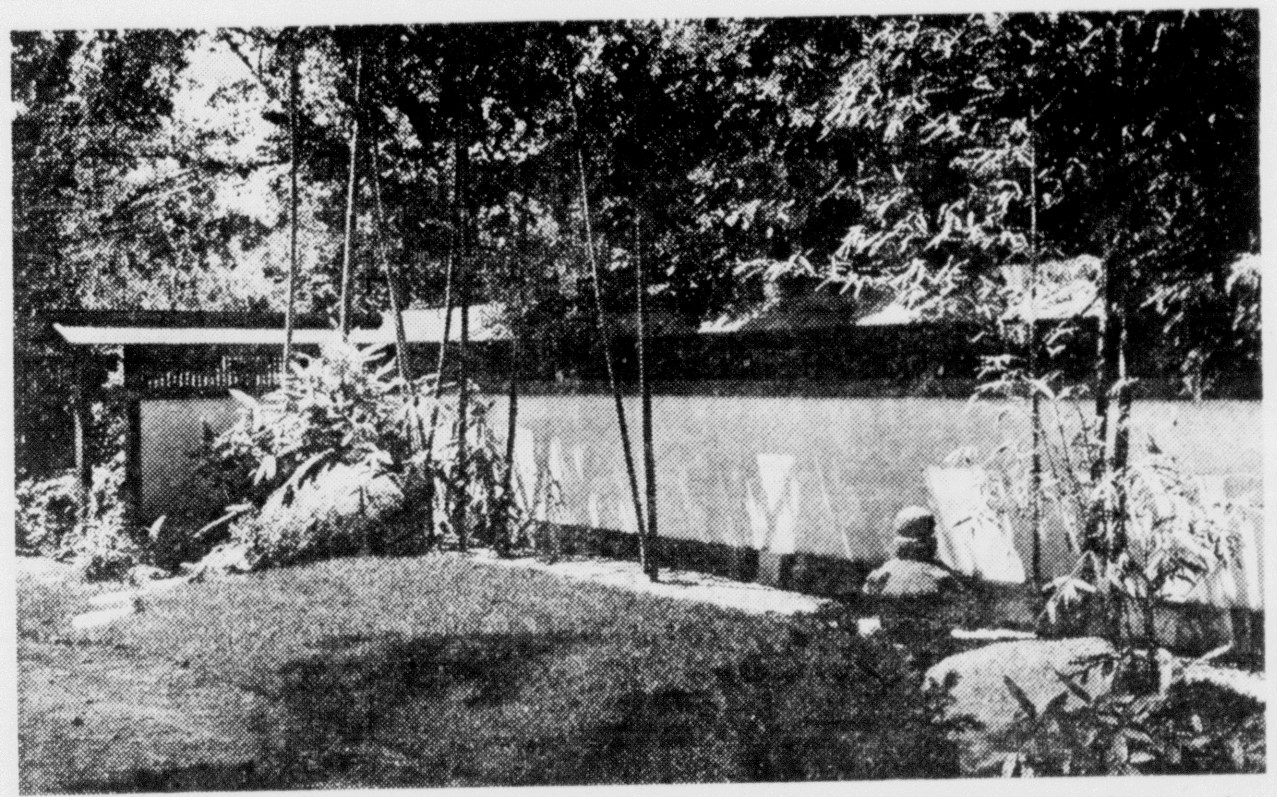
LILA LILLIE again comes up with a possible answer on how best to showcase one's unusual succulents and have a piece of garden statuary as well. This structure, she says, is simple to construct, using two-by-14 redwood planks. She, of course, uses it for succulents. It could be used as a display case for other plants, or used as a strawberry barrel. For a more dramatic effect she has added background lighting. In this unusual planter, she has used kalanchoe pumila with its soft blue-gray foliage and pink flowers. At the base of the structure is a giant echeveria hybrid 10 to 14 inches across. This plant's foliage comes in all colors from pale green to heavy red. The spiny plant in the foreground is aloe plicattelis.



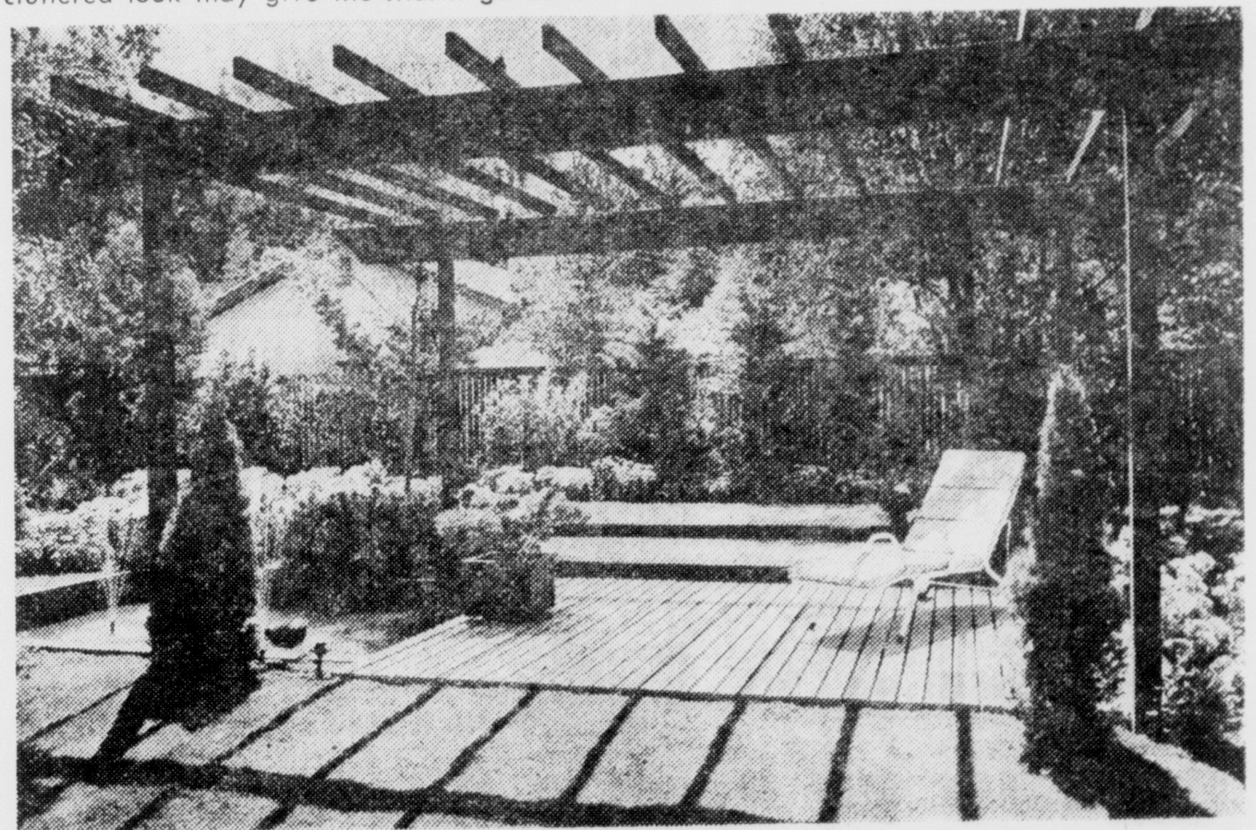
THE "NOW-TYPE" Marin home gardener, striving for a different effect, should, according to Raymond Bisel of Gardens Etc. and Tropic X, Fairfax, scout around for some new material. The creators of this garden came up with a totally different sunscreen, using yellow vinyl rope. This approach to the "Terrace Garden" category, earned them the "Best-in-Show" for construction. From it the home gardener can glean all sorts of ideas from the round, barrel-top step to the interesting shape of the deck itself. Bisel thinks the home gardener, seeking to create a quiet spot in his garden, should ask himself several questions: To what use is the area to be put? How will the transition be made from deck to other areas in the garden? How will it fit in with the house itself? All must be considered.



ENTERED IN THE "dining area" category in last year's "Bridge to Kyoto" themed fair, this simple wooden deck has a million uses in outdoor-living-conscious Marin County. Designed by Cottage Landscape Construction of Vallejo, such a deck could be easily built at floor level as a main-house extension. Note the simple frame lattice work in the rear. This treatment can be used to camouflage a garage or house wall. If the lattice is constructed about a foot away from the wall, it can add interesting shadow patterns. Lighting from behind creates after-dark interest. The Japanese maple, in the foreground, is an ideal tree for this arrangement. The petunia tub adds a note of color that can be picked up in the table appointments.



THIS IS A SECTION of Keith Jongewaard's Japanese style garden, created for last year's Japanese-themed Marin Art and Garden Fair. The plain lines, simple planting and uncluttered look may give the Marin gardener seeking to be fenced-in gracefully an idea. The rocks and bamboo give the clean-cut Oriental feeling. The gravel area, between the fence and the sod, is as much a visual barrier as the wall itself.



WHAT TO DO with a problem corner is answered here by the Bancroft Way Nursery in Berkeley. Note the two-step-up deck in the rear. The terrace itself can be introduced anywhere one has bare land to cover. It is of inexpensive wood with a pool on one end. The overhead trellis can be planted to vine if either wind or sun is a problem. The two Alberta spruces on either side of the terrace need not be planted directly in the ground, but can be tubbed and moved around as needed.

Tuberous Begonia Fans Are Loud In Praise Of Favorites

Gardeners who go for tuberous begonias are rarely lukewarm on the subject.

They'll tell you: "They're the most beautiful . . . most exotic . . . most everything."

At this season of the year you can start shopping for seedling plants at your nursery to be transplanted to the garden as soon as you get them home. And what a far-reaching choice you have!

THERE ARE ruffled double and picotee forms that resemble camellias—others that look like unbelievable roses, carnation doubles, and of course the hanging basket or Pendula form. Color-wise you can run the gauntlet from red, scarlet, pink, white, yellow, orange to salmon . . . mixing, matching or massing to your heart's delight.

Many aficionados of the begonia insist that the hanging basket type is the ultimate satisfaction because it is the answer to a landscaper's dream. With its beautiful cascading habit, these may be grown effectively in baskets or containers or spilling over walls. Each hanging basket will shower you with hundreds of blooms.

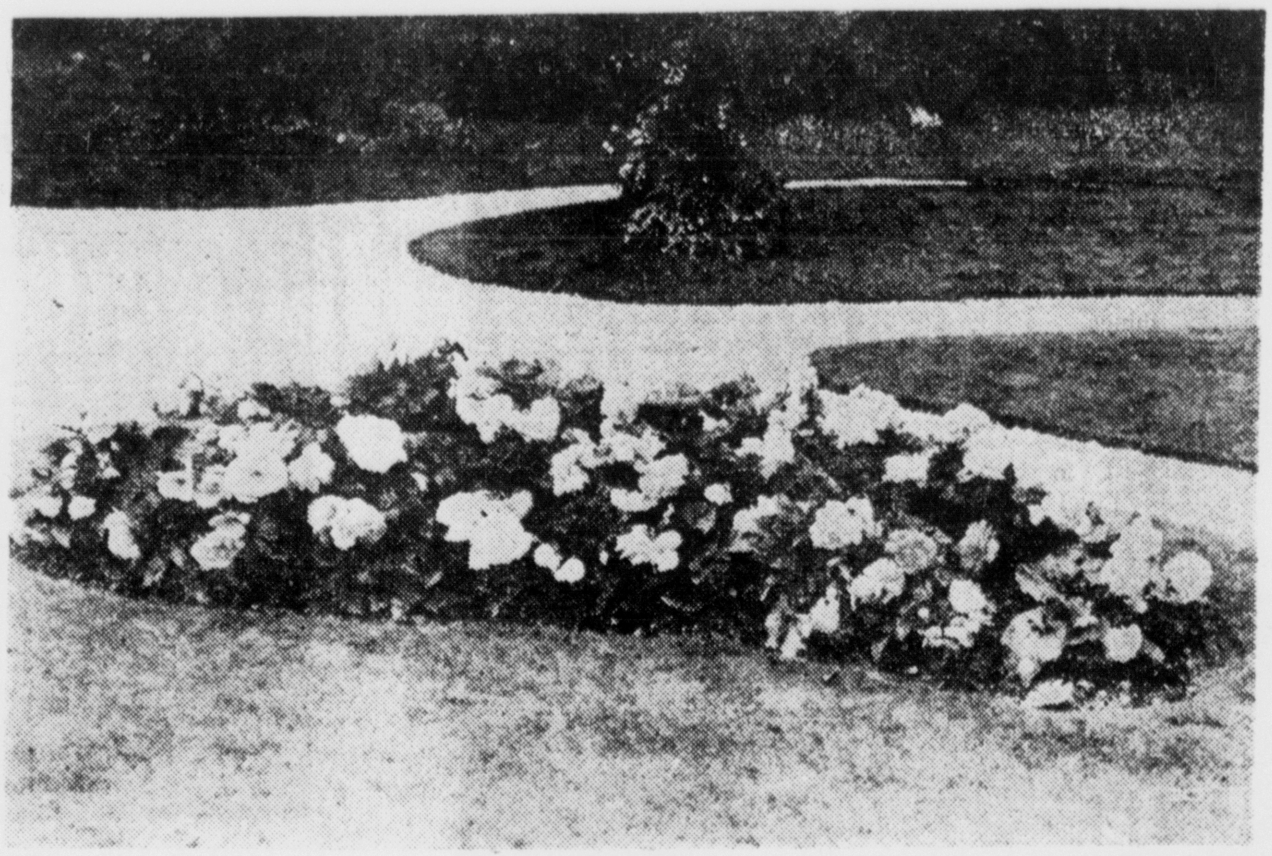
But it is only fair to say that there are as many others who exclaim: "Why put all your begonias in a basket when a mass planting at your feet or interspersed in a bed of greenery is such an immediate sensation."

THERE SEEMS to be only one answer to this problem: Get some of both.

Plant your seedlings or sprouted tubers in partial shade in a wind-free location. Perfect drainage is necessary.

Keep begonias moist after planting.

It won't be long now!



BEGONIAS CAN bed down along a walk, by a fence or up against a light shade tree, and give you an island of white, pink, red and yellow that provides the very color accent that is needed in any garden.

Safety Rules Will Prevent Those Power Mower Mishaps

One of the primary rules of safe lawn cutting operation is: Never let children operate the machine.

The same holds for inexperienced adults.

Going further, the Outdoor Power Equipment Institute warns gardeners never to leave a running lawn mower, riding mower or garden tractor unattended.

With about four million riding mower and lawn and garden tractors in use now, here are a few other do's and don'ts:

Do not wear loose-fitting clothing that could catch on moving parts. Wear sturdy shoes.

Never refuel a hot or running engine. When starting, be sure the vehicle is in neutral position.

Do not carry passengers. Don't direct discharge from the chute toward bystanders.

Turn off the engine before leaving the operator position and engage the parking brake.

Watch for holes in the ground and low tree branches. Know what is behind you before backing up.

Reduce speed on all slopes and sharp turns to prevent tipping.

Keep the machine in good operating condition and keep safety devices in place.

Keep the engine clean and free of accumulations of grass, leaves and spilled fuel that may cause fire.

Refuel out of doors and do not run the engine in a closed garage. Exhaust fumes are dangerous.

Espalier On Wood Delights The Eye

As an eye-delighting accent in the garden, nothing beats a beautifully formed espalier set against a simply designed wall or screen of rough, weather-silvered boards.

But to train an espalier often takes years, and the garden wall it adorns should be built to last a lifetime without refinishing or major repair. For that reason, it's smart to use pressure-treated framing lumber and fence boards, whether fir, cedar or pine.

The Magic Word In Plants Is 'Hybrid'

It's been a relatively short time since hybrids found their way out of corn fields into garden plots but, because gardeners are always looking for better things, the trend toward hybrid super-seeds is growing like Jack's proverbial bean stalk.

There are good reasons for increased interest in hybrids. Reasons like vitality, productivity, earliness, disease resistance, quality, uniformity, better size and adaptability.

AS DAVID BURPEE, head of Burpee Seeds, has pointed out, "There are families in America who still draw water with a hand pump. There's nothing wrong with this method because as sure as the handle goes up and down, water comes out. Still, it's hard to sell hand-pumps to people who're used to turning a faucet and watching water flow effortlessly from the tap. That's the way it is with people who've tried hybrids."

Burpee pioneered in hybrids. He was first with F1 hybrid marigolds, zinnias, double snapdragons and both single and all-double petunias; also first with hybrid tomatoes, cucumbers, egg plants, cantaloupes and zucchini squash, onions, cabbages, brussels sprouts, peppers and watermelons.

Basically a hybrid is no more than the offspring of mixed parentage. The trick is to find the right parents. Hundreds of test crosses between promising parent lines join the long parade of hybrid drop-outs.

STILL, SUCCESSES do come. Few in number and often only after years of work but, like geniuses, they are spectacular in their accomplishments. Because of their extraordinary ability, because they are super-plants, these successes — the climax Marigolds, the Zenith Zinnias, the Big Boy Tomatoes and dozens of others — are destined for fame in a way their parents never were.

Alas, hybrid super-plants can't reproduce themselves. The seeds they make revert and once again bring to life the weaker, more common stock from which they rose.

Then there are hybrids that are entirely sterile, like the three Nugget Marigolds — yellow, gold and orange. They're not just hybrids between different varieties; they're hybrid between different species — the American and the French Marigolds. Their chromosomes are unbalanced, so like the mule animal, they cannot reproduce seed at all.

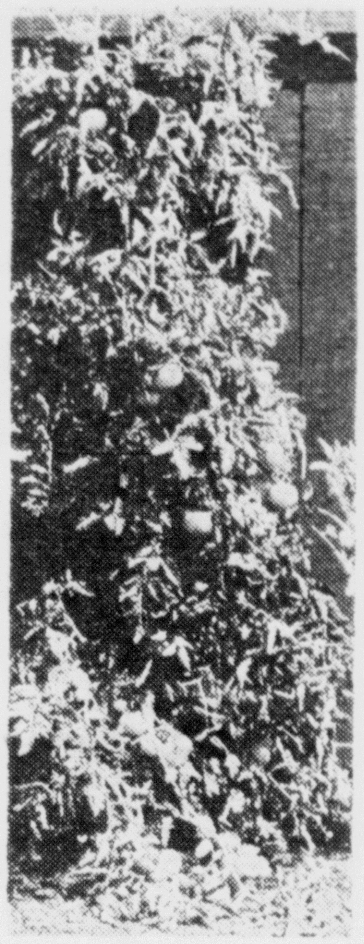
EACH YEAR, then, in controlled plots of land, the bees and sometimes even the human hand, must create them anew. Building hybrids becomes costly and when the gardener picks up a packet of hybrid seed he's sure to notice the price. He might even grumble that he can buy a lot more seeds for a lot less money if he steers clear of hybrids.

Burpee once answered, "Yes, hybrids cost more, but they are worth much more."

The attribute most responsible for the big switch among gardening enthusiasts can be summed up in one word, reliability.

A hybrid seed is a reliable seed. Hybrid seeds staunchly become super-plants and the plants consistently produce gorgeous flowers or extra-good-tasting vegetables. The gardener knows, from the moment he drops a hybrid seed into the rich loam of his garden that when its season of maturity arrives, he'll have abundant reward for the extra money he invested.

Tomato Time



WITH THE DANGER of frost past, now is the time to plant your tomatoes. You don't need a garden plot. A sunny corner will accommodate a few or even a single plant that will yield a worthwhile crop of luscious tomatoes. Tomatoes will stand a deep planting, like a continuous supply of moisture, and also appreciate light, frequent feedings of fertilizer.

Look To Evergreens For Year-Around Beauty

If our gardens looked the same in every season, we'd get tired of them in no time at all

Half the fun of gardening is watching for the first daffodils, enjoying the cheerful faces of the newest petunias and zinnias, and seeing the chrysanthemums blaze out in the fall.

However, there is a permanent framework we have to create in our landscape if we are going to enjoy looking at it every month in the year. Glossy, evergreen shrubs are one of best ways to insure year round beauty, and if we stint on them, we cheat our flowers of the background they deserve.

IF YOUR garden didn't make the showing you wanted it to in certain months last year— if there were times when you seemed to have no garden at all —this is the time to start planting evergreen shrubs for a rich, all-year effect. Shrubs that go in now can get well established before the summer heat.

This is an ideal time to plant them because the soil is so workable at this time of year that you can dig it deeply and condition it well for permanent plantings.

When you plant evergreens for landscape design, you are thinking mainly of their ability to design all year. But don't think you have to forego seasonal color in the shrubs themselves. Some of our most useful evergreen shrubs put on an annual flower or berry display that would make them worthwhile if they only lasted one season.

PINK INDIA Hawthorne is one of these, and if you ask for the new variety, "Enchantress," you'll get large, rich, rose-pink flowers in thick clusters from late winter till early summer, followed by clusters of blue-black berries. This shrub's growing habit is dwarf and compact, and it shows off luxuriant, glossy green foliage to superb advantage.

Pink India Hawthorne will tolerate either sun or part shade, and seashore or desert locations, so plant it with confidence and enjoy its well-groomed beauty in the border or as a foundation plant.

Pyracantha is a shrub that we usually think of as a brilliant cover for rough places, or as a handsome wall espalier. But this year, with the introduction of the compact little "Tiny Tim," we can enjoy this bright berried shrub anywhere in the garden where we need an ornamental, low landscape plant. Practically thornless, and growing no higher than three feet, its tiny rich green foliage is adorned with long clusters of good sized cinnamon red berries that last through the holiday season.

YOU CAN count on its color to make a terrific foil for your chrysanthemums this fall, and its compact mounds of foliage to add architectural strength to your landscape all year.

Another excellent landscape shrub for small borders is the holly-like, variegated osmanthus. If you can give it part shade and an acid soil, you can enjoy its cheerful green and white good looks as an all year contrast to your darker evergreens.

We usually think of azaleas in relation to their flowers; but one of their most valuable assets is their year round attractive foliage. In fact in Japanese gardens, the azalea is used chiefly for its out-of-bloom appearance, and is commonly pruned to low mounds to prevent its flowering at all.

HERE IN THE West we wouldn't dream of sacrificing our azalea blossoms, but we should remember when we buy these glamorous plants that we are investing not only in sheets of spectacular bloom in the spring, but in all year landscape value.

All the shrubs mentioned above are naturally low growing, with medium or fine-textured leaves that make a pleasant foil for seasonal color and a soft green mass all year. Your nurseryman can recommend others that will serve the same purpose.

Plants like this are the ideal foreground for larger, stronger textured shrubs you will want to add, such as rhododendrons or photinias. With handsome, well-placed trees and a neat lawn to complete the framework, you'll have a garden to enjoy whether it's in or out of bloom.

Botanically, some of the plants listed above are: Pink India Hawthorne, (Raphiolepis indica rosea); False Holly, (osmanthus heterophyllus variegatus).

Instant Trees

THE PETUNIA tree can spring up overnight. What you do is build your tree as shown below. Sphagnum moss, burlap or figerglass can be set inside a wire mesh cylinder to hold the plant mix. Nor is the creative person restricted to petunias in his choice of his flowering plant.

The ratings range from 10.0 for the perfect rose, to 9.9 to 9.0 for outstanding; 8.9 to 8.0 for excellent, 7.9 to 7 for good, 6.9 to 6.0 for fair, and 5.9 and lower for questionable.

AMONG HYBRID teas with high rank are Peace, a yellow blend, medium height, 9.4; Mme. Elisa de Vilmorin, medium height, medium red, 9.0; Aida, medium red, 8.9; Fragrant Cloud, orange, 8.8, and three with 8.4 — Charlotte Armstrong, tall, deep pink; Azevedo, pink blend, and Mediterranea, pink blend.

High ranking grandifloras are Queen Elizabeth, medium pink; Montezuma, orange; Carousel, deep red, Ole, orange, and Camelot, medium pink.

ONE OF AMERICA'S most beloved comedians has been honored in the naming of this new rose from Germain's Inc. — the Red Skelton. The flowers progress from glowing orange-red hues as buds to a rich vermilion when partially open to bright red tones a maturity. Open flowers measure up to six inches across.

The Beautiful Evergreen With The Impossible Name

One of the most enthusiastically planted evergreen shrubs in California has the unlikely popular name of Raphiolepis.

Like many another five syllable plant name, it's pronunciation by the layman varies a great deal. Correctly, the accent is placed on the third syllable, "ol".

Nurserymen have tried to have their customers adopt the Raphiolepis' common name—Indian Hawthorn, but to no avail. Hawthorns are supposed to be deciduous trees and not low-growing evergreen shrubs, according to California gardeners.

WHATEVER name you choose for it, personally, you are going to find this handsome, hardy shrub a useful one in your garden. It grows in sun or shade, thrives in any well-drained soil, responds to food and water, or will grow without, if necessary.

Raphiolepis is used as a ground cover, a foundation plant for houses that sit close to the ground, a tubbed specimen or espaliered on a fence or wall. Its bright pink flowers start blooming in February and keep going into May.

The nurseryman who introduced it to California in the depression 30s thought it might deserve a paragraph in his catalog, but soon found that he was growing almost as many Raphiolepis as all of his other plants together, and still not meeting the demand.

SEVERAL CHANCE seedlings have evolved from the original pink "Hawthorn." The first was Coates Crimson. The flowers open a deep rosy pink, fade to a lighter pink. The growth is more compact than the original.

Then came the varieties Springtime, glowing pink, and Enchantress, a rich rose. Their foliage is leathery and glossy green when mature. New leaves, like the parent's are bronzy.

All forms produce a crop of purplish berries following the flowering season.

To keep your Raphiolepis ground-hugging, just trim off the vertical growth in summer. To get the plants off the ground, trim the shoots around the edges, forcing new growth upward.

Don't Get Hooked On Symmetry When You Plan Outdoors

By VIVIAN BROWN

Try for an asymmetrical outdoor look around your house.

The "sort of just-grew" look may be far prettier than static beauty achieved with costly plantings and props.

Nature doesn't conspire to make the outdoors symmetrical but somehow man's idea of house grounds beauty is an orderly arrangement of flowers, shrubs, lawn. The perfection achieved is almost always boring in its implication that anything less is imperfect. This idea of landscaping is so ingrained in Americans that neighbors who can't afford it may envy it.

THEY CAN afford something far more attractive and it can be free.

Nature presents us with the means — stones, wood, rocks — to enhance natural settings. The idea is to look at nature's largesse and see how you can use it in your own setting.

Here are some ideas:

Borders of small pebbles and stones around a house can be very pretty, and pots of flowers may be sunk into them from time to time, if desired. Many people gather pretty pebbles at beaches. (Many people are using the imported shiny black stones, particularly effective around modern houses, but these have become expensive due to the demand. Some people buy chips of white stones.)

Natural stones and wood may be used for steps along paths or a house walk. If one worries that stones are hard on the feet, small stones may be set into either side of large concrete slabs for an attractive effect. One can walk on the smooth section. These slabs should be put down in an interesting arrangement rather that set one behind the other.

Wood logs may be used in a variety of ways. Cut them on end and set the circular cuts in gravel as steps to a little bench under a tree or path to a tool house. Use them lengthwise combined with rocks as risers on an outdoor stairway.

Rocks can provide charming interest in a shallow pond. Stones slightly higher than the water level can make an interesting "bridge" over a pond. A large stone slab can be set over two large flat rocks placed some distance apart to emphasize the bridge idea. Many people use willow trees at ponds and these are very pretty providing the pond doesn't dry. Willow trees will seek water elsewhere and if they are too near the house, may find their way to the water pipes, wrecking them.

Bridging the gap between a deck and nearby pond may be done with a path or more ambitious arrangement of pebbles and stones. If it is at all possible to divert the water with a little trickle through the rocks, the effect will be to tie the two together as if the deck were closer to the pond.

Ponds can come alive too by bordering them with small rocks or pebbles. This is an especially good effect when the lawn around the pond is not too attractive. The stones will offset the scruffy look, picking up the slack between the water and grass, and a statue placed somewhere can provide further enhancement.

A great many ideas may be used to liven up sandy areas around beach houses. Rocks seem to hold up better than some wood steps. Patterns may be made in the sand with rakes. Swirling patterns provide the best results. If the pattern is disturbed by wind, it will still look attractive. Youngsters like that project and many attractive designs emanate from the child using a rake to provide undulating effects in the sand.

ONE FAMILY did an interesting thing with the sand around their house in anticipation of a beach party. They had the children build low mushroom-shaped seats of sand damped with water. They put small circular pieces of colorful plastic over each sand mound after it was dry. These were dotted all over the place for a very attractive look.

It was more fun than sitting flat on the sand although in a short time all the "mushrooms" did flatten out. But the idea remained colorful due to the little plastic covers.

Shade That Cuts Wind

Everyone likes a cool breeze across the patio or deck, but no one wants a real wind.

To catch the breezes and eliminate stronger winds, here's an idea.

Build open frames of four-by-four-inch Douglas fir or white fir lumber at either end of the patio or deck, anchoring them firmly to deck framing or the patio paving. Make the frames four feet wide by six feet tall, using the four-by-fours for sides as well as top and bottom members.

Next, attach screw eyes along the bottom member, spacing them about three inches apart. Then install "window shades" of brightly colored canvas on the underside of the top member.

When the wind whips up, simply pull down the shades, lash their lower edges into the screw eyes at the bottom, and you have a fine wind baffle. When the weather's fine, leave the shades rolled up.

Paint the frames black or stain them a natural wood tone.

TWO BORDER BEAUTIES

AN EFFECTIVE garden border should be all of one plant, so that there is no great variance in heighth or spread. But the colors can be varried. At top, pink heather alyssum makes an effective border. In bottom photo, the mini-pink Thumbelina dwarf zinnia, about six inches high, is another pretty border possibility.

Trees That Offer Shade And Bloom

One usually plants a tree either for its shade — or for its bloom.

But, in California, there are a surprisingly large number of trees worth planting for either — or for both. They are trees of modest size and considerable refinement, two factors which make them ideal for small gardens.

A good example is the Acacia family, whose massed yellow blooms enrich our part of the state each spring. Of all the yellow in the horticultural world, there is none to compare with the show of Acacias in full bloom.

THE BAILEY Acacia, best for flower and shade, too, is a tree of no more than 30 feet in height with good spread. It has attractive, evergreen fernlike foliage.

Its bloom in late winter and early spring defies description — you can see it a mile away!

Not unlike the Acacia in foliage is the deciduous Silk Tree. It differs in growth and flowering. The Silk Tree also has fernlike foliage, but it makes a flat-headed, arching, tree with good spread. But, its summer blooms are pink — a lovely silken pink shade.

Its spreading branches make a canopy of light shade — suitable for sitting under to enjoy during summertime's outdoor living.

STILL ANOTHER tree with fernlike foliage is the Jacaranda, grown primarily in Southern California but found also at times in our part of the state. It is larger than either the Bailey Acacia or Silk Tree, and has a full, rounded head. The lavender blue blooms are spectacular in late May and June, and carry into the summer months.

From the Eucalyptus family come several flowering trees worth planting, with two especially suitable for the small garden. These are the Red Flowering Gum and the Red Iron Bark, both of which produce summer blooms.

Red Flowering Gum makes a substantial tree with less of the open, airy look about it than most members of the family. You see it in parkway plantings, and it is equally good in the garden, where its modest size will produce modest shade.

RED IRON BARK is a more slender tree, more typically a Eucalyptus in its habit of growth. The narrow leaves are pendulous and loosely carried. The greyish bark breaks to reveal a red under layer, which gives the tree its common name. Pink flowers come primarily in summer.

Also, don't overlook other Eucalyptus varieties your nurseryman has to offer. You'll be surprised just how many members of the family there are to provide unusual growth and colors for the garden.

Be sure to tell the nurseryman the approximate space you have available so he can recommend the best-suited Eucalyptus variety.

The Silk Oak makes a fine shade tree and while in bloom attracts much attention. Tall and rather slender, the Silk Oak produces bunches of golden yellow flowers in the summertime. A tree of considerable refinement, it also has a ferny foliage, and is a lush, dark green in color.

It's not really an oak at all, but with anything so beautiful, who cares about names?

MANY OTHER trees that will create shade and provide beauty with blooms are available in nurseries.

Now is an excellent time to plant trees. Experienced gardeners know that trees planted now will get the jump on the growing season.

'Mum Society Speaks Out For Its Favorite Plant

Chrysanthemums have come a long way in the last 10 years with California and Florida hybridizers, as well as Japanese growers, developing some 800 new cultivars in that period.

So reports the Chrysanthemums Society of Marin, composed of the county's most ardent 'mum enthusiasts.

"It is now possible in Marin to have 'mums blooming from July until Christmas time," the society says. But it adds that the beautiful show or exhibition types produce in the September-October-November period to enhance the autumn garden when it most needs flowers.

BEST RESULTS can be obtained by starting new plants each year, the society says. Old clumps are often diseased or develop an ungainly appearance. New plants are easier to control and will provide a better quality of blooms.

'Mums like a rich soil with good drainage. They are heavy feeders, so a good fertilization program should be scheduled throughout the growing period up until the time the buds show color.

A pinching back of the growth in July will encourage branching and will also prevent the plants from growing too tall. "The less the amount of stem, the larger the blooms," the society explains.

ALSO IMPORTANT is a good staking and tying program to keep the 'mums from sprawling and becoming unsightly.

Also vital is a good pest and fungus control program.

'Mums should never be planted closer than two feet to another plant, since good air circulation is important.

The Chrysanthemum Society of Marin conducts a plant sale each May, offering Marinites an excellent opportunity to acquire cultivars of the types best suited to our area.

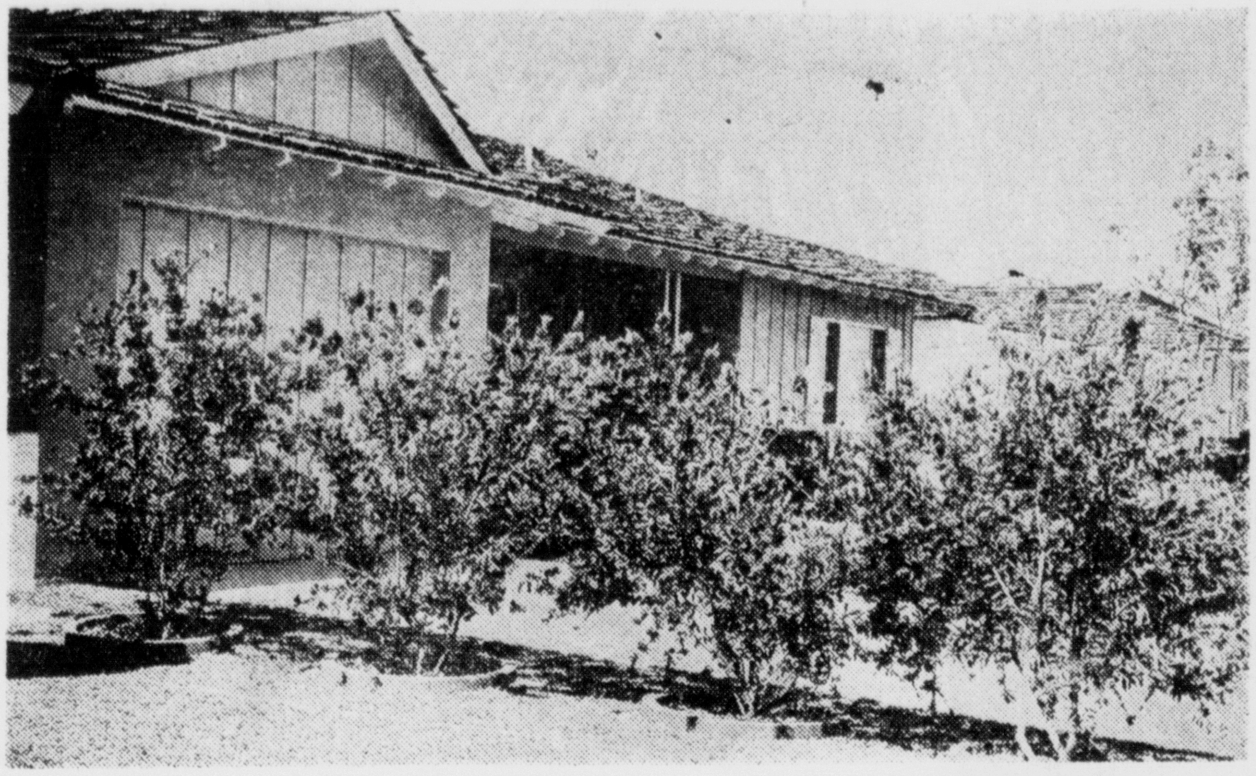
The Bottle Brush Will Do The Job In The Tough Places

It's As Exotic In Appearance As It Is Durable In Its Growth



AN INFORMAL and highly decorative screen has been achieved here with a planting of Red Bottle Brush along the driveway. It will fill out eventually into a colorful, living wall. (Photo courtesy of California Association of Nurserymen)

Not all of us are blessed with perfect growing conditions and there are times we long for something showy as well as durable.

This perfectly describes the Bottle Brushes.

It was not too many decades ago that this rather exotic looking shrub with its brilliant red "flowers" in the shape of brushes (such as those you use to clean baby bottles) was a true curiosity. It was rare enough to stop traffic.

But those days are long gone.

PLANT BREEDERS have carefully selected the finest of the Bottle Brushes to coax the biggest, reddest flowers out of the feathery plant and you can see how successful they have been by looking along highway and by-way from Eureka to San Diego.

The Bottle Brushes are of interest to home owners because they can be used in many ways and they thrive on heat or tolerate the vagaries of coastal life with its fog-again-sun-again weather.

The Bottle Brushes will grow in strong wind or where there is no wind; they will hold down a roving sand dune, if you insist, or they will keep soil from being washed away from a hot, dry bank where other plants cry for help. And yet they are so presentable, and so eager to please, they'll perform beautifully in good soil, even tolerate and deserve a place on the edge of a lawn — provided the drainage is good.

THEY DON'T like to get their feet wet and keep them wet. The water must drain away to keep them happy.

The "flower" that attracts the eye is actually individual stamens in a cluster of tiny flowers, thus the bristly effect. These are excellent flowers for cutting as they will last two weeks or even more in the house. And after you cut off a bloom, the plant soon puts out new growth and you get new flowers.

If you cut them for use in the house, however, remember to pound the ends of the stems gently before putting them in water. It aids the capillary action.

THIS AUSTRALIAN native seemingly has endless virtues. So far no insects seem to bother it. It does not rust or mildew or do anything wrong or have any ills. You can use it as an informal hedge for it will take shearing and shaping.

While it will take considerable pruning, it is better not to prune it too much because its natural shape is quite pleasing. However, if space is a problem, you can espalier it — prune it so it will grow flat against a wall with arms outspread.

Do not overlook its ability to tolerate wind, including the very tough trade winds that blow all along our coast during the summer. By using the taller sorts, you can create a sheltered area where the many handsome shrubs and perennials that don't appreciate a trade wind will grow without difficulty.

AN INTERESTING combination would be one of the Bottle Brushes with strawberries. Or they go well with the Australian Fuchsia.

For good color contrast if used to hold dry banks or some similar difficult area, couple the Bottle Brushes with one of the Cotoneaster groundcovers.

The upright Bottle Brushe are best where they stand alone or with other members of their tribe. Their leaves are rather light green and seem more like needles (but not sharp) than leaves and one of the family is even called the Pineleaf Bottle Brush, so they obviously are "different" from the general run of garden shrubs. They can readily be used as specimen plants, standing alone to show their stamens to best advantage; or they can even be used as large foundation plantings where there is a rather high foundation problem to overcome.

THE WEEPING or Prostrate Bottle Brushes, however, will serve where the foundation is low.

There are other forms than the red-brushed varieties, including a white and purple, but both are quite rare and unlikely to be found in even your best nurseries — and that is usually for a very good reason. The red-brushed sorts are the most spectacular by far.

Another beauty that is quite rugged and is only just coming into its own is the Brazilian Skyflower which can stand moist coastal conditions but prefers the hot, dry, well-drained conditions of the Bottle Brushes.

AS THE NAME implies, this has blue flowers, a good, clear blue, in June or July, blooms about two months then yields to clusters of golden berries that are a handsome contrast to the bright green leaves.

Heat it likes, but unlike the Bottle Brushes, the Skyflower can't take hard freezing unless it has some degree of shelter.

Don't Plant Your Trees Too Deeply

Don't bury your fine shade trees.

Valuable trees are in danger of dying because soil is heaped around their bases or because they are planted too deep.

"These practices occur most frequently where new houses are being built," says tree man Robert Bartlett.

Lots are filled in order to establish proper grade for lawns and outdoor living space. But when tree roots are buried under such fill, the health of the tree will decline. Without air and water, the tree is susceptible to disease and insects.

How can you tell if your tree is buried?

The trunk should flare — spread out — as it enters the soil. If it doesn't, the tree is buried.

Some remedies: Scrape away excess fill. Place tile pipe in geometric fashion to allow air, water and food to reach the roots. Spread stone or coarse gravel and cover with a layer of salt hay or similar substance. Add top soil to bring up grade level.

Check The Handles

Check the wooden handles of your garden tools for tightness and for splits and splinters. Loose handles can cause accidents, and splinters in the fingers are not exactly comfortable.

Fijians Give Their Guests Tender, Loving Care Now

THIS YOUNG LADY comes up with a prize catch, a beautiful conchshell, while swimming in the warm lagoon off Yanuca Island in Fiji. The Fijian, a new resort hotel, can be seen in the background.

Not so long ago, perhaps as recent as the mid-1800s, visitors to the Fijis sometimes wound up in a stewing pot, or whatever it was the islanders used for cooking people on festive occasions.

While "the good old days" are usually looked upon as belonging to the past, in Fiji's case, at least, it would seem that the very best days are right now.

At least that is true for the visitors who are thronging to the sun-filled islands in the South Pacific.

EXCEPT FOR dietary habits and for the new hotels that minister tender, loving care to tourists, not much has changed in the Fijis. They are still far from spoiled.

More and more people are visiting Fiji, taking advantage of increased air and ship links with the outside.

Those who arrive by plane step out at Nadi Airport, 145 miles from the capital city of Suva on the big island of Viti Levu. The airport was built during World War II and is probably further from its destination city than any other in the world, but Fiji Airlines delivers its passengers to Suva in 45 minutes by smaller plane. Or they can make the trip by car, driving over a road that isn't paved, but is lightly trafficked, and offers delightful scenery including native Fijian villages where the residents have genuine smiles for the visitor.

SOME OF THE villages may be inspected because the natives are kind enough to let strangers wander through their homes.

Near the airport are several excellent hotels including the Mocambo, the Sky Lodge and the Tanoa, with swimming pools and everything else to make guests comfortable.

Along the drive to Suva, 50 miles from Nadi, a most pleasant surprise is Yanuca Island, located just offshore, with its elegant Fijian Hotel. This is the last word in luxury, and sports fishing boats are at the dock to carry passengers out for some of the greatest deep sea fishing anywhere. Rates for single rooms start at $15, and for doubles at $19.

AT DUSK EACH evening, a conch shell is sounded as a signal to young Fijians to light torches in the hotel gardens, an impressive sight.

Still farther along the road is the Korolevu Beach Hotel, an institution in Fiji and well known to many visitors. It has long been a favored resting place to spend a few pleasant days in the Fiji Islands.

Tourists who arrive by ship put into the harbor at Suva, and off they go to inspect this delightful city whose population is nearing 60,000. Its cosmopolitan flavor stems from the Fijians themselves, as well as Jongans, Chinese, Samoans, the many Indians who have either migrated or were born here, and Europeans who also live in Suva. That, in itself, is enough to give a city an international flavor and Suva has it in abundance.

ALL THE MAJOR shipping and air routes in the South Pacific include stops at these magnificent islands.

Shopping is endlessly rewarding. Fiji sells a large range of duty free items, and goods from everywhere are obtainable in this British Crown Colony where English is the principal language. Things to look for are cameras, projectors, wood carvings, watches, binoculars, furs, perfumes, jewelry and tape-recorders.

Recommended is a trip on one of the many glass-bottom boats. It's a great way to spend a few hours out in the harbor among the multi-colored tropical fish and coral.

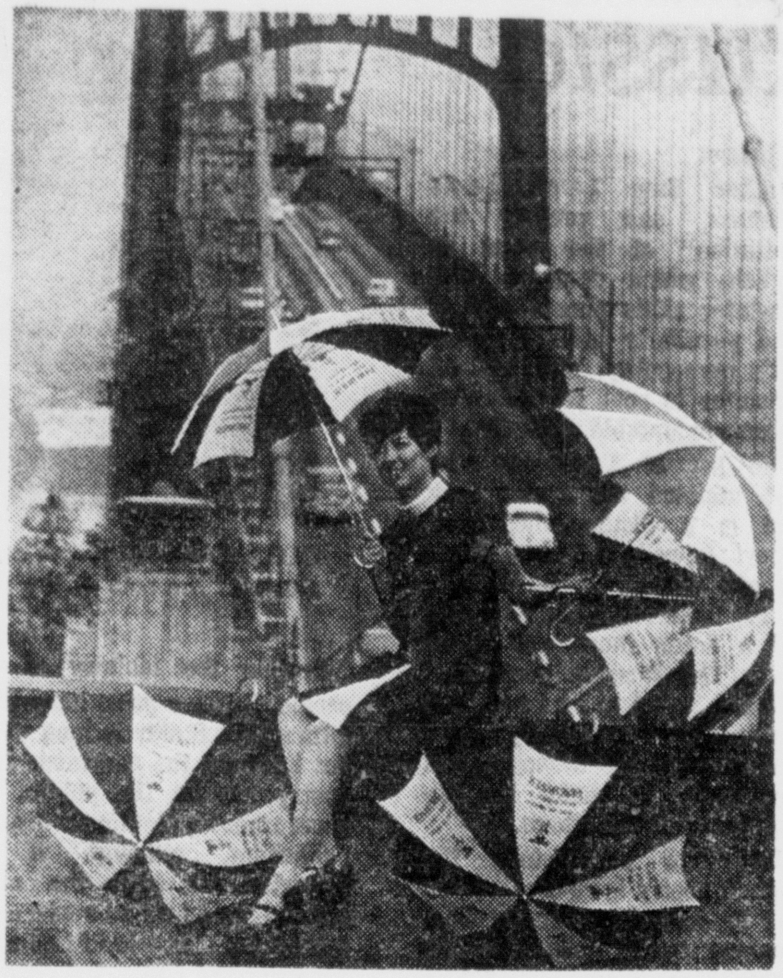
THE VENERABLE old Grand Pacific Hotel, with its new additions, is the dean of such homes-away-from-home in this part of the world, and the Travelodge adjacent to it is also good. Four miles out of town is Trade Winds and, like the others, it is on the beach. All have very reasonable prices.

Sightseeing is what would be expected; verdant mountains, the famed fire-walkers (who may or may not be doing their "thing"), sugar cane plantations, coconuts everywhere, excellent beaches for fossicking and snorkeling, swimming, boating, and an all-round good time that can be shared by all.

Fiji is one of those places that visitors hate to leave. Most of them do so reluctantly, wishing that more experienced planning had permitted them to stay a few days longer.



THERE IS NO getting around it, admits the Visitors and Convention Bureau of Greater Vancouver, B. C., that area does have rain. But the bureau, in urging Californians to include British Columbia in their 1969 vacation plans, points out that it will provide the umbrellas for visitors caught in showers who call at its offices. The courtesy umbrellas, some of which are shown here by pretty Barbara Kelly atop Lion's Gate Bridge, are loaned free.

A Vital Art In Russia

POETS ON STREET CORNERS, by Olga Carlisle; Ran--dom House, 429 pages, $6.95. Reviewed by Laurel Shapiro.

Second only to soccer in the minds of the people, poetry is a vital and popular art in the Soviet Union.

Editions sell out in a few hours. Public readings are major events and an audience of 10,000 is considered normal for a popular poet.

This book, a portrait of 15 Russian poets of this and the previous generation, with a good sampling of their work, gives an intriguing inside view of the role the poet plays in the USSR. In spite of lamentable handicaps, it is a role that could hardly be more in contrast to the modest attention his American counterpart attracts.

While oral poetry is a strong Russian tradition, one must have reservations about the quality of poetry that is adaptable to such broad, casual declamation, for it necessarily must be devoid of subtlety and depth. Miss Carlisle, who knew several of these poets as a child, records that Russian poets are indeed concerned that contemporary work is watered down for street corner consumption, and fear that in some cases it is becoming no more significant than popular song.

However, most of the poets in this collection seem far removed from pop art (the exception is a pitifully inept present-day group called the "barrack poets"). It is a splendid collection: the poem in Russian on one page, and the English re-creation on the other, so that those lucky enough to know both languages can compare the two renditions at a glance.

Miss Carlisle explains that problems of translation had much to do with which poets were included, and this collection is not to be taken as an indication of the poets' standing in Russia.

Rather than technical closeness, she prefers an "imitation" of the poem in English, which demands high translator skills plus a cast of mind peculiarly attuned to the poet's personality. Matching translator to poet is sometimes an insurmountable difficulty.

The list of Americans who have adapted the Soviet work here is a distinguished one: Robert Lowell, Adrienne Rich, Richard Wilbur, W. S. Merwin, Denise Levertov, Stanley Kunitz and a dozen more well-known poets. The Russian poets best known in America are Pasternak, Voznesensky and Yevtushenko; one welcomes this opportunity to make the acquaintance of the others.

Just how successfully the original poetry is re-created can only be judged by the Russian-speaking, but in most cases the poems work, often excitingly so, as poems in English.

OLGA CARLISLE IS the author of "Poets on Street Corners," a study of the role of the poet in the Soviet Union.

Despite the idolatry of the people, Russian poets have their difficulties. Stalin is long dead, but knowing the enormous hold poetry has on the public, the government maintains control of publishing, although it is powerless to stop the often astonishing circulation, in typescript, of officially unrecognized poets. It is a matter of grave concern to Soviet intellectuals that many of their poets of the first stature cannot be published for political reasons.

But it is also true that many a poet of the first importance cannot get published in the United States, either — although that is due to public indifference, not to say distaste. A quite different — one would hesitate to say healthier — situation.

Reviews Of New Reading

Sparks And Explosions From A Man Of Many Struggles

ELDRIDGE CLEAVER: POST-PRISON WRITINGS AND SPEECHES edited by Robert Scheer; Ramparts/Random House, 212 pages, $5.95. Reviewed by Jeff Greer.

Readers who let the ugly, short words in this book dull their minds to the real message this black man is broadcasting are either too sensitive ever to cope with the world's realities, or too stupid to realize that anyone else has feelings, fears, hates or hopes.

Cleaver's second book really isn't a book like his "Soul on Ice." That was a carefully-thought-out, carefully written and polished work done during the slow time of prison days. The new book is a series of sparks, explosions and sometimes flinty fizzles struck from Cleaver's day-to-day contact with the crises of the outside world.

Many of the pieces were written under deadline pressure as a reporter from Ramparts Magazine; some were not even written, but rather dictated. Others are transcripts of speeches.

Subscribers who read Ramparts will already have seen much of the material, more in the context of then-current events than it is now that Cleaver has vanished and the college Black Power scene has overshadowed the struggle in the streets and polling places upon which the Panthers cut their eyeteeth and Cleaver reported.

The book's readers will not find a single, steady viewpoint in Cleaver's writings. He was going through too much development, having too many intensely personal struggles. He wrote from day-to-day, and not in retrospect in most pieces.

But, the pieces are gutsy, and sometimes offer sheer expressive beauty that might sound trite written by someone else.

Book For Gun Buffs On Weapon That Tamed West

SAGA OF THE COLT SIX-SHOOTER by George E. Virgines; Frederick Fell, 199 pages, $7.95. Reviewed by Bryce W. Anderson.

"Saga of the Colt Six-Shooter" is a book for gun buffs; more particularly, for Colt gun buffs; more particularly still, for buffs of the Colt single-action six-shooter, best known of the Colt Patent Firearms Co.'s products.

Even in such a circumscribed field, there is plenty of variety, for the Colt "SA" came in several calibres (although the .45 is by far the best known) and in various models. It was introduced first as a cavalry arm, but played its most famous role as the favorite side-arm of frontiersmen in the taming of the West.

The book is in three parts: the first a history of the manufacture of the revolvers; the second, "Historic Colts and the Famous Men Who Used Them"; the third, recent developments in Colt manufacture.

Even the second part, however, is concerned almost entirely with the guns; there is little material about the men.

George E. Virgines is not much of a writer, but he has assembled a tremendous amount of information about his favorite side-arm. It's a valuable book — for gun buffs.

Indians Vs. The Wicked Capitalists

STRONG WIND by Miguel Angel Asturias; Delacorte Press, 242 pages, $6.95. Reviewed by Laurel Shapiro.

Winner of the 1967 Nobel Prize for Literature, Miguel Asturias has spent many years in exile from his native Guatemala, although he now serves in his country's diplomatic service.

It is also paradoxical that, while his political convictions are an integral part of his work, he won his reputation as a stylist and innovator; he has been compared to Joyce and Faulkner.

This book, translated by Gregory Rabassa, is the first of a projected trilogy on the exploitation of an unnamed Central American country by a North American banana company, and embodies his compassionate involvement with the jungle Indians.

The plot is unbashedly full-blown melodrama, without subtlety in its indictment of the wicked capitalists. An example is the Green Pope, mysterious New York head of Tropical Banana, who is straight out of fantastic comics. In fact, throughout, Asturias is not able to do much with the Americans; even the gringo savior, who leads the Indians in their rebellion, and his wife, with the green-gold, as in bananas, hair, are stiff and lifeless.

It is the Indians the author renders with exciting artistry, in all the sweat and poetry of their lives. Often the Indians and brooding jungle seem to merge; it is here, in the jungle, that Asturias' richly textured, lyrical prose works supremely well. He is robustly earthy at times also; Indians and jungle do indeed merge when the men, insane with exhaustion and fever, mistake the banana trees for alluring women.

The oppressive atmosphere of plantation life seems to close over the reader's head; he, too, is saturated by the tropical heat and implacable greed of the banana company that drains the people of their eager dreams of the "green gold."

Having paid that great compliment to his talent, one must go on to say that there is a disjointed, almost amateurish quality to the way Asturias handles his material. He drifts haphazardly from one group of people to another, introduces a character in depth and then drops him completely, stretches and telescopes time abruptly, seemingly for his own convenience.

But for all that, the doomed struggle of the Indians is presented in unforgettable, full-color intensity.

Comic Intrigue By Lovable Cast With Bloody Incidents

BLOOD OF STRAWBERRIES by Henry Van Dyke; Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 278 pages, $5.50. Reviewed by James E. Williams.

A note to the mystery fan: This short novel is not in the true sense a tome from a sleuth story writer. However, it's full of comical intrigue, a few bloody (strawberry) incidents and a set of lovable characters.

Strawberries is a continuing episode in the life of Oliver, who appeared in Van Dyke's first novel, "Ladies of the Rachmaninoff Eyes."

Oliver tells the story of his 20th summer as he saw it happen. Underlying all the comic byplay is the young man's search for identity in a world centered around Max Rhode, an octogenarian steeped in the field of literature; his lifelong enemy-friend, Orson Valentine; and of all people, the late Gertrude Stein.

Van Dyke fills his pages with a stream of witty remarks in keeping with his unusual set of characters. As the Stein theme develops (too good to reveal), it reminds this reviewer of a scene from an old Keystone Kops movie.

In the end, Oliver, a Negro youth who was willed to Rhode and his wife, from a late relative, comes to understand an earlier question put to his white girl friend: "How do I become a Negro?"

A Genuine Cowboy Tells What Range Life Was Really Like

BEN K. GREEN is still very much a Texas cattleman, but he reaches back into his younger cowboying days for the tales he recounts in his new book, "Wild Cow Tales."

By DON KEOWN

WILD COW TALES by Ben K. Green; Knopf, 306 pages, $5.95.

WESTERN WORDS by Ramon F. Adams; University of Oklahoma Press, 355 pages, $7.95.

The most romanticized and misrepresented figure in all history may well be the American cowboy.

Thanks to fiction writers, movie makers and now to television producers, the cowboy has emerged as a handsome, clean shaven and colorfully garbed young man who divided his time between singing western tunes, wooing pretty girls and gunning down Indians and desperadoes. As depicted, he had about as much contact with cattle as you or I.

The real cowboy, of course, was handier with a branding iron or rope than he was with a gun. He was more accomplished at swearing than at singing. He was bearded, sweaty and dirty. And generally he was more at home in the company of his horses or a herd of cantankerous steers than he was in human society, including that of comely young women.

"Wild Cow Tales" by Ben K. Green is a book about and by that kind of cowboy.

As a tough and brash young Texan, Green was the genuine article, a working cowpuncher who earned his livelihood on horseback, buying wild cattle "range delivery," then rounding them up from the thorny brush and rugged canyons, and somehow driving them to the nearest shipping point or market. Later he became a veterinarian, practicing that profession in the Southwest in an area that remained horse country long after the few surviving cowboys elsewhere had become mechanized and traded their cow ponies for pickup trucks and jeeps. Now he raises horses and cattle at Cumby, Tex.

Green has already written one book, "Horse Tradin'," that is regarded as something of a classic for its realistic depiction of the Southwest earlier in this century. "Wild Cow Tales" has that same flavor and same value, and like its predecessor, is amusing reading.

The book consists of a series of anecdotes told Texas-style by Green with more humor than modesty of those years when he was engaged in the back-breaking, neck-risking work of flushing outlaw steers from the thickets, after buying them at a fraction of the price of more domesticated beef. One is disappointed by Green's failure to fix more definitely the dates for his stories, but the introduction indicates that most took place in the 1920s and the 1930s when many people thought the era of the cowboy on horseback had ended.

Green's young cockiness is sometimes so downright irritating that one finds oneself rooting for the critters. But it is an honest presentation of how a cowboy went about his work, and his attitude toward it. The cowboy, no sentimentalist, regarded the steer as not only a brute, but as his enemy. And he set out to master it, using his toughness and whatever tactics were required. These sometimes consisted of outright cruelty, and one flinches as Green tells with some pride of sewing shut the eyelids of a couple of uncooperative steers so that he could control them, or of propping open the eyes of another small herd, using wooden pegs lodged in slots he slit into their eyelids.

But it was a hard life, certain to breed hard thinking and hard action from the men who lived it. And other men besides the cowboy have taken it as a personal insult when they have encountered animals contrary enough to resist their efforts to subdue or destroy them.

All that aside, Ben Green has done a service to western history in putting down these authentic recollections from his cowboying days. It was a way of life that left its permanent stamp upon a large section of this country. The importance of the book is indicated by its publisher, Alfred A. Knopf, who seldom bothers with books that are less than exceptionally meritorious.

RAMON F. ADAMS is unchallenged as a bibliographer and lexicographer of the Old West.

His reputation was firmly established 25 years ago with the publication of his "Western Words: A Dictionary of the Range, Cow Camp, and Trail," and enhanced by later work.

Now "Western Words" has been greatly expanded and published in a new edition by the University of Oklahoma Press to which all students of frontier history and lore are so deeply indebted for so many things.

The expansion consists largely of adding to the cowboy lingo the language and slang of other western occupations — the trapper, the boatman, the miner, the gambler, the railroad builder, the buffalo hunter, the stagecoach driver, the logger, the Indian.

Thus the book now bears a new and shorter subtitle: "A Dictionary of the American West."

While Adams writes with a loose and breezy feel, it is a serious work of immense benefit to writers and students of western Americana. It is also fun reading to run down the meaning of such colorful terms as siwash, fiddle-foot, hunker, sawdust savage, black water, coyoting and tin pants.

THE ONLY really effective "textbook" on the journalistic specialty of sportswriting, "How to Cover, Write and Edit Sports" by Louis I. Gelfand and Harry E. Heath Jr., has been updated and published under a new title, "Modern Sportwriting," by the Iowa State University Press.

Now, more than ever, it is an invaluable tool for the aspiring or beginning sportwriter, or for the reporter who covers athletics occasionally. Even the seasoned sports reporter is certain to find much in its pages that will help him to improve his understanding of the games and to better his coverage of them.

Both Gelfand, now public relations director for the Pillsbury Co., and Heath, now director of the Oklahoma State University School of Journalism, have sportswriting backgrounds. They have put an extraordinary amount of effort into their big book, discussing the fundamentals and the intricacies of good newspaper writing, and taking up all the more important sports individually so that their special problems can be accorded due attention.

Examples, both good and bad, of modern-day sportswriting are employed and analyzed generously, and there is also expert discussion of typography, page design and copy editing.

Always, the emphasis is upon serious professional competency in a field that sometimes gives way to slapdash coverage and careless writing. The co-authors stress that no newspaper field offers greater opportunity for the display of ability than do the sports pages.

Priced at $8.50, it is a one-of-its-kind book that should not only be acquired by those entering or considering sportswriting careers, but should then be studied most assiduously. It can be the equal of many a semester course in a university school of journalism.

SOMEONE thinks up the ideas and writes the verses for those greeting cards you see in the stationary stores, drug stores, gift shops, etc. And they get paid for doing so. For those who would like to get in on the act, Writer's Digest has published "The Greeting Card Writer's Handbook," edited by H. Joseph Chadwick and containing the best advice of professionals in the field. It costs $5.95.

Sleuths & Suspense

THE FLAMING MAN by M. E. Chaber; Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 180 pages, $3.95. Reviewed by Don Keown.

Insurance investigator Milo March is definitely one of crime fiction's more entertaining "tough guy" detectives.

Chaber puts him through another fast-paced case. This time March is sent to Los Angeles to investigate the burning of a building in which three men died. The fire occurred at the peak of the ghetto riots, and other buildings were burning all around it. But was this one really touched off by rioters?

Between drinks and violent encounters with a couple of Mafia mobsters, March proceeds to find out.

Hardly memorable as to plot or characters, it is nevertheless an amusing addition to the skein of Milo March novels that have won a considerable following.

Some New Books For Juniors

The "pop-up" book idea has, of course, proven itself with the tykes, and we are seeing more and more of it.

Sometimes, unfortunately, it is used as a gimmick to sell what are otherwise inferior books.

Random House, however, has reversed that trend, and has applied the "pop-up" technique to a new series of books dealing with the better children's classics.

Two new books demonstrate how effectively it works — "Pinocchio" and "Cinderella."

Albert G. Miller, an expert at this sort of thing, has retold the two old tales. Paul Taylor has designed the books. Dave Chambers, Gwen Gordon, John Spencer and Jon Dahlstrom have done the gay, colorful illustrations.

The stories come alive as an entire puppet show leaps from a page, as Pinocchio takes his first steps, as horses and pumpkin coach appear from nowhere.

The $2.95 price tag per book is most reasonable for these well-planned and well-executed entertainment packages.

Some other new books for the juniors:

Robert C. Lee has a lot going for him in his "I Was A Teenage Hero" (McGraw-Hill, $4.95), including sports action, good characterization, problems with which young readers can identify, and best of all, humor. Emmettsville High School has been going downhill athletically because the town has been doing the same population-wise. But the arrival of three husky young triplet brothers brightens the picture. Except that they know nothing about basketball. Johnny Dace sets out to remedy that weakness, and also to put Emmettsville back on the map with the triplets' help. It's a good fun yarn for boys.

THIS PHOTOGRAPH is from "The Two Friends" by Grete Mannheim who also took the appealing pictures that make up the illustrations. Alfred Knopf Inc. is the publisher.

"First Nursery Rhymes" (Walck, $1.95) is an exquisitely small, beautifully done booklet for tots. Twenty-three tried-and-true nursery rhymes make up the contents. The delicate artwork, some of it in color, is by Brende Meredity Seymour. It is a little jewel, just right for tiny hands.

A bulldog and his animal friends keep things moving at a lively pace in "Rutgers and the Water-Snouts" (Harper, $3.95) by Barbara Dana. There are adventures and misadventures aplenty, from a battle of wits with a muskrat to a flood threat. As for those water snouts — you'll have to read the book to find out what they are.

BREAKFAST BLUES vanish when a garden view accompanies the bacon, eggs and cereal. This kitchen garden was created by opening the wall with glass and adding a screen of cedar one-by-twos to frame a tiny court. Hardy evergreens and interesting rocks sparkle in the sunshine.

A Refreshing Garden View Sweetens The Breakfast Cereal

Nearly everyone agrees that a good breakfast gets the day off to a swinging start.

But what makes a good breakfast? Is it enough to gulp the regulation vitamin-protein-mineral requirements while flying through the kitchen at a dead run? Or should breakfast time try to live up to its television image?

Okay, no one's kidding anyone. In the average household, there just isn't time for truth and beauty at 7 a.m. Still, a lot of the feeling of hurry could be diminished if the scene were tranquil enough to invite sitting down for an instant.

MAKING THE difference is something to look at besides the cereal box. For instance, a spot of garden alongside the breakfast table does wonders to refresh spirits, and it's not hard to supply.

If there's presently a large window by the breakfast table, half the job's already done. If not, the first step is to provide window space — perhaps with a sliding glass door unit that lets you carry breakfast outdoors on a balmy morning.

The second step is to enclose space for the little garden.

There are two reasons for screening: It frames the garden by providing a backdrop. And it assures privacy in the kitchen — important if you're the breakfast-in-bathrobe type.

THE SCREEN must be tall, of course, to substitute for window shades. But a lacy design of vertical one-by-twos won't seem enclosing and it's easy to build.

Place four-by-four-inch cedar posts at the garden's four corners and connect them with two-by-four rails at top, bottom and center. Then just nail the cedar slats flat over the rails, to the inside or outside, whichever you prefer.

Add a two-by-six-inch cap board for a trim look along the top and finish the screen with semi-transparent stain.

THE GARDEN itself can be used as the main focal point, utterly simple. One tall, fluffy shrub or dwarf tree should do with a few low, hardy evergreens and an interesting rock or two completing the plan. If there's space, a small bench makes a pleasant touch.

Tubbed annuals can be added for summer color and potted herbs can be grown here, too.

Groundcover could be crushed rock, paving stones or squares of wood decking.

Bird-watchers might add feeders and a bird bath to bring breakfast time action to the protected garden.

"What Made The Holes In My Silk Dress?"

Those holes are not from moths or silverfish as you might suspect. Would you believe common table salt? It is. In your dress it appears that food containing salt was spilled on it. The salt went to work on the slender silk threads and when the dress was flexed in the cleaning process, the damage appeared.

The same damage may occur in the underarm areas of a silk garment, caused by the salt in perspiration. Silk and wool trousers, too, find the silk threads damaged from food containing salt or from perspiration.

Silk yarns are strong, but only when the diameter of the yarn is large enough for the purpose for which it is being used. If it is not, ordinary flexing of the garment in wear and at points of strain will result in splits in addition to the damage common salt can cause to silk.

THE HOME WORKSHOP

Some Questions To Be Answered

Starting a home workshop is more than a matter of purchasing the proper tools and then finding some place around the house where you can use them.

Like the golfer who says "I should have . . . " after misplacing a shot, the handyman who hastily puts together a workshop is likely to discover later that some things should have been done differently.

You can avoid regrets by some thoughtful planning.

YOUR FIRST consideration is the location of the work area. The more space at your disposal, the better. But there's more to it than that. You have to ask yourself some questions and, on the basis of the answers, decide what to do.

Here are some of those questions:

Will the probable location have some natural light? While it's always possible to provide all the artificial light you want, you'll find it a lot more pleasant to work where you can get some view of the outside, even if it's only a glimpse of the sky.

WILL THERE be sufficient heat, assuming you live in an area where the winters get fairly cold? If not, will a space heater do the job or will it be necessary to run heating lines into the area?

What about accessibility? Remember that there may be times when you have to move large-sized materials into the workshop. If this will be difficult because of narrow stairs or the necessity of carrying everything through rooms of the house, consider the possibility of placing the shop near a window, as might be the case in a basement.

Do you have or will you be able to install electrical outlets in convenient places? The chances are you will have a number of power tools. Will it be necessary to have an extra line to handle the increased electrical load?

WILL THE shop be located where the noise emanating from it will disturb the rest of the house? In a basement, for instance, you might be able to place the work region under a room which isn't likely to be used while you're in the shop. And if you have no choice, what soundproofing measures will be necessary?

Will it be a healthful place in which to spend many hours each week? Continual dampness can affect your body as adversely as it will your metal tools and the wooden materials which you will use. Can the dampness be eliminated?

Will there be enough ventilation? This is especially important if — as is likely — you will be using paints, varnishes, lacquers and other finishing materials, as well as certain kinds of cements and other products that are toxic or flammable.

How To Hide The Trash Can

Nobody loves a garbage can. But can you imagine surviving without one?

The trouble is, trash cans aren't very decorative. Keep one handy by the back door and it's going to show. Hide it, and you can't get at it.

Or, at least, that used to be the case.

Today, American ingenuity has come to the rescue with four slick ideas that put the garbage can right where you want it but conceal it, too.

One idea hides sunken cans under a lid. The other three employ a sort of fence to do the trick.

TWO OF THE screening tricks work particularly well when the cans are kept on the street side of the house — a not uncommon situation.

For a sunken can set adjacent to the driveway and kitchen door, a shin-high, L-shaped "fence" built on two sides will effectively conceal the trash can from view. This miniature fence can be slat-style, with two-by-twos nailed vertically to rails of the same material. A two-by-four cap board makes it look extra trim.

The screen can be attached to the house wall and to the paving with right-angle galvanized straps at the corners. The open side should face the driveway, of course.

WHEN A CARPORT is built across the front of the house as part of the main entrance, an enclosed service yard located at the carport's edge is perfect for either sunken or standing trash cans. Full-height walls are needed on three sides, with the back left open for easy access from the house.

A gate should be included in the front wall.

If possible, match the service yard walls and gate to the house siding pattern. Or use one-by-four-inch boards finished to match the house color.

For backyard situations, two ideas are offered.

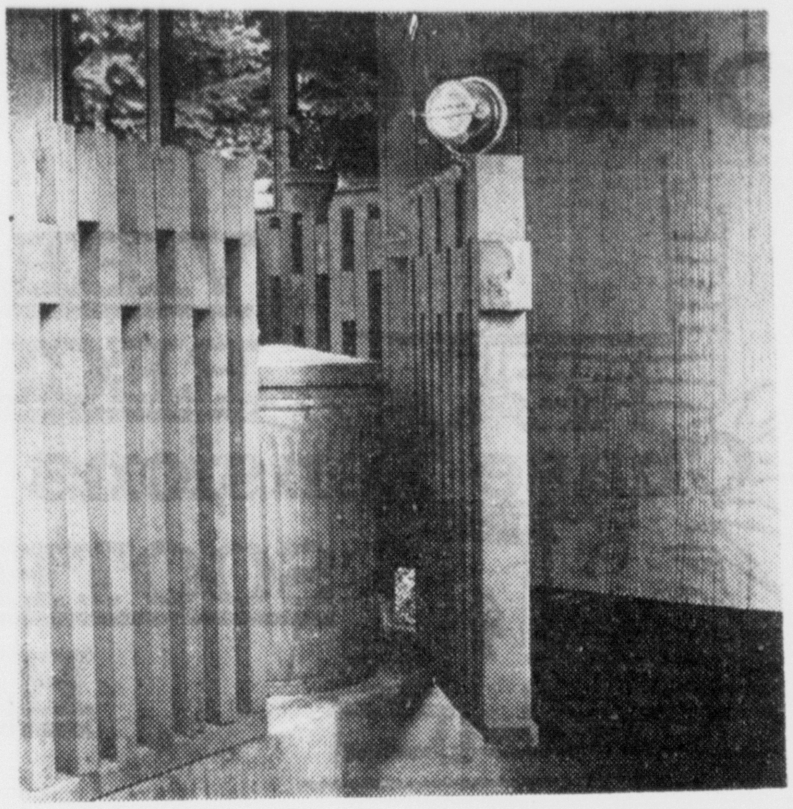
WHEN THE kitchen door opens directly to the main patio, sunken trash cans by the door can be completely concealed by a low box with hinged lids. Sides of the box can be a pair of flat two-by-fours nailed one on top of the other and bolted to the paving.

Lids can be built with lath stapled to one-by-one-inch framing. Miter corners of the lid frames to get a neat job and lip the lids over the box at the front to provide a hand grip. Use butt hinges to attach them to the box.

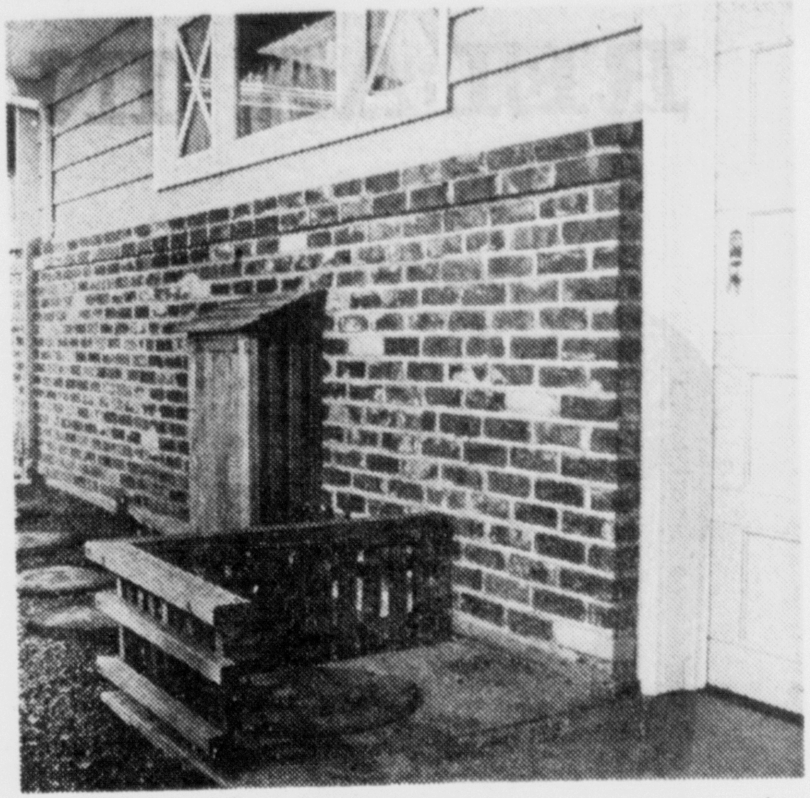
To conceal standing cans, all that's needed is a simple screen built about four inches higher than the cans. This screen should enclose the cans on all sides and a gate must be provided for their removal. But to deposit trash, just reach over the top of the screen and lift the can's lid. There's no extra fuss involved.

ANY OF THE four ideas is easy to execute and lends itself readily to design variations. Materials can be western red cedar, Douglas fir, white fir or pine finished with paint or stain.

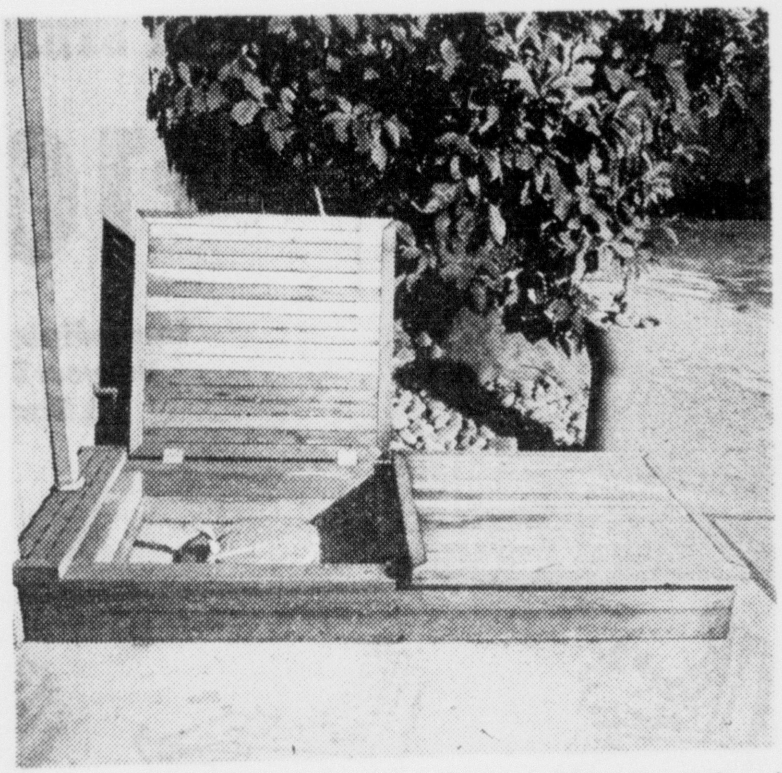
Place standing cans on a base of sand and gravel so rain water drains away freely.



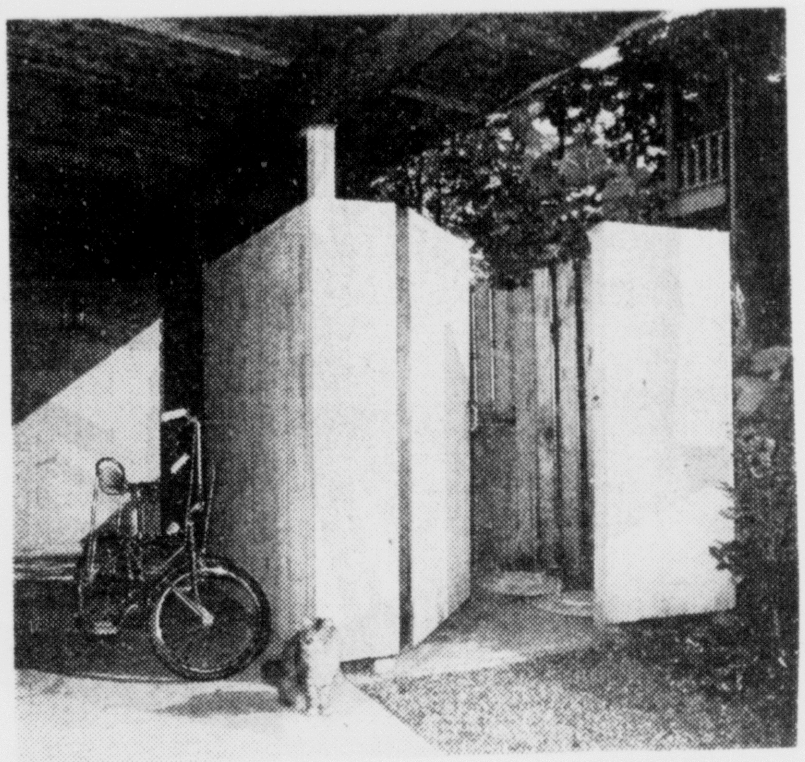
A SCREEN OF vertical two-by-fours conceals the trash can, but is low enough to reach over and deposit garbage. The gate permits easy removal of the can.



BY THE GARAGE entrance, a shin-high screen of two-by-twos hides the sunken can from the street and front walk. Hose and faucet are in miniature shed.



FLIP-TOP COVERS that look like a low bench when closed hide the sunken cans that are located in full view of the patio and swimming pool.



THIS SERVICE AREA, which adjoins the carport at front of the house, has been concealed by a high cedar board fence that matches the siding of the home.

Gets to a Major Cause of Hemorrhoids

Now! Most complete 3-way relief!

Important development: unlike every other hemorrhoid product, Counternoid™ works in 3 ways:
1. Lessens pain fast.
2. Coats, soothes and protects injured tissue.
3. Gets to a major cause of hemorrhoids: painful hard constipation.

In hospital X-ray tests, doctors have demonstrated that the exclusive Counternoid formulation with DSS$_{30}$™ penetrates in minutes to the top of the rectal area to soften the stool and ease the bowel movement, to make natural healing possible.

Remember: Counternoid. For temporary relief of minor hemorrhoid troubles. The most complete 3-way relief you can get without a prescription or without surgery. At all drug counters.
